PREFACE

This work of which the first instalment is now published, grew by way of a digression from our monograph—‘Asoka’s Dhamma, a landmark of Indian literature and religion’, which is still in course of preparation. The digression took place at a point where the question of the bearing of Asoka’s inscriptions and teachings on the Dhammapada class of Buddhist literature had to be discussed. The original plan was to re-adjust the verses and fragments and correct the readings in M. Senart’s edition, wherever necessary and possible, chiefly in the light of the extant Pāli and the Sanskrit parallels. The idea of a complete edition with notes, translation and introduction was not conceived until after an interview with the Hon’ble Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, President of the Post-Graduate Councils, who was kind enough to discuss with us the detail of the plan of the work, inspiring us to undertake the work and finish it by all means. We are happy that the undertaking is now fulfilled, although we do not doubt that the execution of the work would have been far more satisfactory, if placed in better hands.

It is especially gratifying to us that we have been able to re-edit a work which excited so much interest since its first publication about a quarter of a century ago and publish a greater portion of it fortunately during the lifetime of the illustrious M. Senart who ushered it into existence. The world will also remember with gratitude the labors of the Russian and French travellers—Petroffsky and Dutreuil de Rhins—who had discovered the fragments of the Kharoṣṭhī Manuscript and taken them to Europe. It is to Serge d'Oldenbourg that we owe the adjustment of a few fragments of the few verses, incorporated in M. Senart's Plate marked B.

In order to facilitate comparison, we have felt it necessary to reproduce in Part I of our work M. Senart's edition with his valuable notes translated into English. His parallel quotations have been omitted in Part I, but reproduced in Part II, marked with a †. The few alphabetical types used by him in paleographic discussion had to be omitted in our translation for the simple reason that they would be quite out of place without the fac-simile of the plates. So much about the reproduction of his work. Our part in the work consists in a radical shuffling and re-arrangement of his plates, fragments and, in some cases, verse-lines, consistently with the colophons indicating the total number of verses contained in a group, with the result that the whole work has been divided into so many distinct chapters. No fragment has been left unadjusted and no verse left incomplete, although there are one or two doubtful cases. Numerous new identifications and parallels have been supplied from all possible sources corroborating our adjustments and readings. The verses have been commented on by notes explaining their position in a chapter, and bringing out their literary, linguistic and historical significance. Part III contains the text as adjusted and restored in Part II, with translation. Part IV contains a short dissertation on the genesis, development and historical importance of the Dhammapada class of texts, while in Part V an attempt has been made to construct a comparative grammar of the language of the Prakrit text and that of the Kharoṣṭhī inscriptions and documents. In the Introduction will be found an account of the various recensions of the Dhammapada with special reference to their history, place and significance in Buddhism, while the Glossary contains an index of words with their meanings and Pāli and Sanskrit equivalents.

It will be seen that the plan of the chapters appearing in Part II of this instalment was worked out independently of the very valuable suggestions of R. Otto Franke in his article Zum Manuskript Dutreuil de Rhins contributed to the Z. D. M. G. (60), 1906, and of Sylvain Lévi in his Study of the Recensions of the Dhammapada (J. A. September-October, 1912). We have the satisfaction to note that our readjustments and identifications coincide in numerous instances with theirs. The names of scholars who have contributed in manifold ways to the knowledge of the Dhammapada texts will be found in the Bibliography of references which follows.

Our obligation to Sir Asutosh is too great for words, and we shall ever remain grateful to him for the personal interest he has taken in the progress of the work. Our thanks are also due to Kabibhaskar Srijut Sasankamohan Sen, B.A., the Gopaldas Chowdhury Lecturer in Bengali, who has offered us from time to time important suggestions particularly with regard to the interpretation of the text. We have profited a great deal by some useful suggestions from Prof. Sylvain Lévi who was good enough to read the proofs of the latter portion of the Introduction. We are no less thankful to Mr. Ramaprasad Chanda, B.A., Superintendent, Indian Museum, Calcutta, Mr. B. C. Majumdar, B.A., Lecturer in Indian Vernaculars and in Comparative Philology, Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, M.A., Carmichael Professor of Ancient Indian History and Culture, Dr. I. J. S. Taraporewala, Professor of Comparative Philology and Dr. F. W. Thomas, Librarian, India Office Library, who have also shown interest in the preparation of an edition like the present, and to Mr. Ramaprasad Chaudhury, M.A., and Mr. Prabodhechandra Bagehi, M.A., who were kind enough to assist us in various ways.

It must be said to the credit of Mr. A. C. Ghatak, B.A., Superintendent, Calcutta University Press, that but for his able management the work could not have been printed in the form in which it is now brought out. Lastly, we cannot close this Preface without a word of thanks to Babu Probodhchandra Chakravarti of the University Press who was entrusted with the work of setting up and who has acquitted himself of his task so well.

N. B.—So far as our information goes (J.R.A.S., 1899, p. 429) there is still a portion, perhaps a larger portion, of the Kharosthī Ms. under the disposal of Serge d'Oldenbourg and we can never doubt that when the contents thereof are made known, they will serve to enrich our knowledge of the Dhammapada. Nothing could be more regrettable to us than the fact that the prospect of seeing the portion in print has to be indefinitely deferred. It also pains us to confess that Beck's edition of the Tibetan version of the Udānavarga, so much praised by Lévi and other Tibetan scholars, is a sealed book to us. In going through Rockhill's translation of the Tibetan work one is apt to feel embarrassed by the tentative character of it, and the first suspicion is strengthened when it is compared with the portions of the Sanskrit original now within our reach. But by far the most bewildering is Beal's translation of the Fa-kheu-pi-u, although the original translators in Chinese are very largely responsible for a violent distortion of the contents and sense of the Indian original. If the Fa-kheu-pi-u or its text portion the Fa-kheu-king be the specimen of the Chinese rendering of Indian texts, the student of Indian literature will surely labour in vain in grappling with the super-human and almost unsurmountable difficulty of mastering a knowledge of the Chinese alphabet and diction—a pursuit which, to put in the words of a witty Bengalee friend, will amount to breaking one's teeth in cracking the nut for so scanty and strange a kernel.

Grünwedel, Stein and Pelliot have placed humanity under a deep debt of gratitude by their successive missions into Central Asia, or more correctly to say, the Chinese Turkestan, for bringing together numerous fragments of the manuscript of the Udānavarga which is undoubtedly a Buddhist work of the Dhammapada class. We cannot but agree with M. de la Vallée Poussin in thinking that the text of this Ms. is a recension of the original of the Tibetan text attributed to Dharmatrāta and bearing the name of Udānavarga. But one must naturally be tempted to join issue with him when he describes the language of the text as “quasi-Sanscrit,” for although in certain verses the older Pāli or Prakritic forms are retained, obviously for the sake of metre, the attempt at Sanskritisation appears to have reached in this text a stage well-nigh perfection as compared with previous attempts.

Introduction

1. Discovery of the Kharoṣṭhī Manuscript of the Dhammapada.—The Dhammapada, now edited and translated with improved readings and readjustments, is the only text of which a fragment has been preserved in Kharoṣṭhī, a script in which two recensions of Asoka's Rock Edicts, at Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra, are inscribed, and this is the only Buddhist text which has been hitherto found composed in a Prakrit dialect. The manuscript is one of the earliest finds from Khotan. Among later finds in Khotan, we have to mention a few documents containing "dispositions and reports of local authorities, instructions, regulations, official and private correspondence—all inscribed in the Kharoṣṭhī script and drawn up in a Prakrit dialect."¹ Prof. Lüders says, "the date of the Prakrit documents is fixed by the Chinese wooden tablets which have been mixed with the later, and one of which is dated A.D. 269."² The first discovery of the Prakrit text of the Dhammapada in Kharoṣṭhī was made in 1892 by the French traveller Dutreuil de Rhins, who found altogether three fragments in Khotan, which he despatched to Paris. With regard to these fragments Prof. Lüders notes: "In 1897 Senart made known their contents and value..... Senart's communication created a sensation in the Aryan section of the Oriental Congress held in Paris. The find represented a Kharoṣṭhī manuscript.

² Lüders' paper Über die literarischen Funde von Ostturkestan, translated by Mr. G. K. Nariman in his Literary History, p. 238.

The Kharoṣṭhī character till then had been known only from inscriptions in the outermost boundary of North-West India. Epigraphical comparison proved the date of the manuscript to be the second century. As to its contents, it was a recension of the Pāli Dhammapada in a Prakrit dialect, which was till then unknown in literary compositions. The manuscript was only a fragment. Another portion of the same manuscript was brought to Petrograd."¹ The portion which was taken by a Russian traveller to St. Petersburg (now called Petrograd), was, as M. Senart says,² deciphered and adjusted by Serge d'Oldenbourg, who later on placed the documents at his disposal. This courtesy on the part of the Russian servant was all the more welcome to M. Senart at a time when he himself was engaged in deciphering and adjusting the fragments in the Rhins collection. On examination M. Senart found that Serge d'Oldenbourg's documents filled some gaps in the fragments of the Paris manuscript at which he was working. In Senart's edition, published in 1897 (Journal Asiatique), Serge d'Oldenbourg's documents have been incorporated intact (see B, II. 1-15, pp. 24-31).

Since the publication of M. Senart's edition in 1897, several European scholars headed by Lüders have taken pains to make improvements on it and discuss the paleographic linguistic and literary importance of the Kharoṣṭhī manuscript. We shall never forget the day when in going together through M. Senart's edition we were struck by some inaccuracies of both identification and adjustment of the fragments as well as of particular verses, the first impression gradually deepening into settled conviction of certain drawbacks in the otherwise excellent work of a scholar whose name is in the very forefront of Oriental scholarship. At an opportune moment we chanced upon two incomplete couplets in his arrangement, numbered as line 1 in his plate A² and as line 17, or the last line, in his plate A¹. These lines, considered by him as two separate verses, appeared to us to be but integral parts of one single verse. To be clear, let us quote the lines as manipulated by him :

.. madenamakabha devanasamidh(i)gat .

apra

u

apramada praśajhati prainadu garahitu sada

(A³, 17)

He has taken A², 1 to be the remnant of a verse for which he could find no parallel in Pāli or in Buddhist Sanskrit. It is obvious that in commenting upon it he completely lost sight of the Dhammapada verse 30, which reads :

Appamādena Maghavā devānaṃ seṭṭhataṃ gato

Appamādaṃ pasāṃsanti pamādo garahito sadā

—or else he would not have been led into equating kabha of makabha with a Sk. garbha (see pp 5-6), but would have easily suggested that the Prakrit makabha is the counterpart of the Pāli Maghavā. But coming to A³, 17 he made a right hit on the aforesaid Pāli parallel, forgetting, however, to enquire whether A², 1—which he had already come across—with the reading madena makabha devanasamidh(i) gat . . which sounded so close to the Pāli (appa)mādena Maghavā devānaṃ seṭṭhataṃ gat(o), could be referred back to in order to fill up the gap. But he could not possibly do so without putting the Plate A² immediately after A³, and thereby impairing his adjustment of the plates arranged in the order A², A³. His failure to combine A³, 17 and A², 1 into one verse is, it seems, due to a fatal oversight, and this oversight on his part led us to examine the fac-similes appended to the text edited by him, and we found that the top of the fragment A² was broken in such a way that it could be exactly fitted into the bottom of the fragment

A³, so as to give us a complete Prakrit counterpart of the Pāli verse 30, quoted in the last page. Thus we were tempted to place A² immediately after A³ and complete the Prakrit verse, by linking together A³, 17 and A², 1, as follows :—

apra[nadlena makabha devanasamidh(i) gat]u apramada praśajhatī pramadu garahiru sada ○

We felt further justified by the fact that, for the commencement of the first foot, we had in A³, 17 exactly two letters, a pra, answering to the two dots of omissions in A², 1, and for the last letter of the second foot, we had n in A³, 17, answering to a dot of omission in A², 1. Proceeding to test the result of this preliminary examination, we had to satisfy ourselves whether the proposed inversion of M. Senart's Plates A² and A³ could justify the unreconciled colophons "ga 25" (at the end of Plate A¹), and "ga 30" (in the middle of Plate A³), which indicated that the four plates, arranged by M. Senart in the order A¹, A², A³, A⁴, contained two groups of Dhammapada verses, one consisting of 25 stanzas, and another of 30 stanzas. It was indeed a very happy moment when we found that by completely reversing M. Senart's order the verses and the four plates could be systematically arranged in two groups or chapters, consistently with the colophons "ga 30" and "ga 25"—a procedure ensuring a logical sequence of thought in the teaching of the groups and the verses alike. Taking our cue herefrom, we have made bold to dispute the whole arrangement of M. Senart's edition, which leaves colophons unexplained. Nay, we have ventured to reconstruct a number of hopelessly mutilated verses, particularly those at the end of Plate B, and to adjust and readjust a host of fragments and verses, testing almost every case in the light of a Pāli or a Sanskrit parallel, and the results of our investigation have been embodied in the following pages, to be judged for what they are worth.

2. The title "Prakrit Dhammapada".—M. Senart's edition, entitled "Le Manuscrit Kharosthî du Dhammapada" is commonly known as 'the Kharoṣṭhī Recension of the Dhammapada,' which is a misnomer. The title chosen by the French scholar implies a meaning quite different from that which is conveyed by 'Kharoṣṭhī recension,' a name which suggests at once to the mind the idea of a copy of the Dhammapada in the Kharoṣṭhī 'language,' while, as a matter of fact, Kharoṣṭhī is only the name of a script in which the text has been preserved. They also speak of a 'Turfan Recension' since the publication of a specimen of the Sanskrit Udānavarga, of which a manuscript in fragments has been found in Turfan. As Prof. Pischel, who was the first to bring this specimen to light, explains, the title "Die Turfan-Recensionen" refers only to a manuscript, found in Turfan, of a Sanskrit recension of the Pāli Dhammapada.¹ 'Turfan Recension' must be regarded as a misnomer until it is definitely proved that there was a redaction made of the Udānavarga in Turfan. When, for instance, we speak of the Bengal, Benares and Bombay recensions of the Rāmāyana we understand no more than so many editions of a single epic in Sanskrit, varying with one another according as they are based upon different readings in the different provinces, that is to say, upon texts as altered or modified by the scribes and repeaters of the three localities. The same holds true of the recensions of the Mahābhārata and other texts. But the case of 'the Dhammapada recensions' is somewhat different; for, in speaking of the Dhammapada recensions we cannot mean so many redactions of the same text in the same language, but so many different texts with different titles, composed in different languages, but belonging to a common literary type. To name one Dhammapada recension, in this special sense, after the script (e.g., Kharoṣṭhī recension) and another after the place of find (e.g., Turfan recension) cannot but be misleading and unscientific. This way of naming the Dhammapada texts would go to unnecessarily add to the number of recensions in the case of every new find in a new script or in a new place. The best way to have a consistent method of naming them would be, we think, to apply to them the name of the language in which they are composed. So far as the Tibetan or Chinese versions of some of these Dhammapada texts are concerned, they are to be considered as translations of one or other recension of the Dhammapada. The Chinese Fa-khen-kung, as may be judged from Beal's English translation of its commentary, the Fa-khen-pi-n, is neither a faithful translation nor entirely a new compilation, but bears the character of both. A special case is therefore to be made out for it. It may be put down as a 'Chinese Recension in translation' and considered along with a Pāli, Prakrit or Sanskrit recension, upon which its translation portion is based. If, in the case of a particular Dhammapada recension, or text, as we should also call it, e.g., the Sanskrit Udānavarga, the faithful translations differ in expressions or in ideas, if it happens that there are two or more Tibetan translations of certain originals in Indian language which generally agree in contents and differ slightly here and there, we cannot but admit that their originals were only so many recensions of only one text. If, applying this consideration to the study of two or more translations of a particular Dhammapada text, it appears that they differ either in regard to the arrangement of chapters, the number and arrangement of verses and expressions, then we have to regard them as different versions based upon different recensions of the same text, leaving a sufficient margin for the errors of the translators as well as for the blunders in the original manuscripts of the text from which the translations were made.

Now, coming to the question of the title of our text, it is clear and admitted on all hands that it is composed in a Prakrit dialect, and, as will be shown anon, it is on the whole an original compilation, having some verses and ideas in common with other Dhammapada texts that are now known to us in Pāli, in Mixed Sanskrit or in Classical Sanskrit. It is this common substratum of the Dhammapada texts and the uniform plan and literary principle which they conform to wherein lies the justification of classing our text as a Dhammapada Recension, although the fragments of the Kharoṣṭhī Manuscript on which it is based, leave us in the dark about its title. Further, we prefer to call it a 'Prakrit Dhammapada' inasmuch as the logical differentia of the text as a copy of the Dhammapada can be derived from its linguistic characterization.

3. Recensions and Copies of the Dhammapada.—In order to determine the place of our text in the history of the Buddhist literature it is essential that we should have a closer acquaintance with the various 'recensions' and 'copies', of the Dhammapada that are now extant. Strictly, we can speak only of four recensions, viz., the Pāli, the Prakrit, the Mixed Sanskrit and the Sanskrit, to which a fifth might be added, viz., the Pu-khen-king, which is a Chinese Recension in translation. The four Indian recensions comprise not less than six copies of the Dhammapada and three commentaries incorporating the text.

(i) Pāli Dhammapada.—Of the existing copies of the Dhammapada this is the best known and most complete. We have several editions of it in Singhalese, Burmese, Siamese, Devanāgarī, Roman and Bengali characters, of which the latest and best is the one published by the Pāli Text Society. The excellence of this edition is in a large measure due to Fausböll's edition, so well-known to the students of Buddhist literature. Fausböll was perhaps the first to collect numerous references containing parallels from Buddhist works in Pāli, Prakrit, Mixed Sanskrit, Sanskrit and from a few important Brahmanical works like the Manu, the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata. Fausböll occupies the foremost place alike as an editor and a Latin translator. But Max Müller was the first to translate it into English. We have another English translation of the text by James Gray, three German translations by Profs. Weber, Schröder and Neumann, and a French translation by M. Fernando Hû. The text contains 423 stanzas distributed into 21 groups each of which is varied according to the manner of its component verses. It represents a book of the Khuddakaniṭṭhāya of the Theravāda (Sthaviravāda) canon preserved in Ceylon, Siam and Burma. There is a commentary which tradition attributes to Buddhaghosa, though, judging by its style, one cannot help doubting if Buddhaghosa was its real author. It is stated in the opening verses that the existing commentary in Pāli was based upon an older commentary in Singhalese and that the author undertook the work at the instance of a Thera Kumāra Kassapa (of Ceylon). The commentary itself consists of 26 chapters, each one of which appertains to a chapter of the text. One or more verses of a group are encased in a prose story setting forth the occasion on which the Buddha uttered the verse or verses. A prose exegesis forms a sequel to the moral verse or verses and is itself followed by an identification of the Buddha with the hero of the story if it happens to be an account of his previous birth, and by a statement of the psychological effect of the discourse on the mind of the hearer. Indeed, the method of the Dhammapada Commentary is precisely like that of the Jātaka Commentary, edited by Fausböll. We have three editions of the Dhammapada Commentary, one in Singhalese character, published in Ceylon, another in Roman, published by the Pāli Text Society and a third in Devanāgarī, published by the Buddhist Text Society, the last one containing the text and the prose exegesis.

(ii) Prakṛit Dhammapada.—Of this copy we have preserved only one fragmentary manuscript in Kharoṣṭhī, found among the ruins of the Goṣṛinga-vihāra, 13 miles from Khotan in the circle of Indian colonies. In the absence of a complete record it is impossible to say exactly how many chapters and verses the text contained. It is equally difficult to ascertain the arrangement of its chapters from detached plates and fragments on which M. Senart's edition is based. The chapters and verses, as they occur in our arrangement, are as follows :—

Order of Chapter	Name of Chapter	Number of Verses
1	Magavaga	30
2	Apramada-vaga	25
3	Cetavaga	hap. & u complete)
4	Paṇavaga	10

Order of Chapter	Name of Chapter	Number of Verses
5	Sahasavaga	17
6	Panitavaga or Dhamāṭhavaga	10
7	Balavaga	7 (Chapter incomplete)
8	Jaravaga	25
9	Suhavaga	20 (Chapter almost complete)
10	Taṣavaga	7 (Chapter incomplete)
11*	Bhikhuvaga	40
12	Bramanavaga	50 (?)
Total number		251

We do not know if there is any Tibetan or Chinese translation of it. Its author's name is unknown. No information is yet forthcoming if any commentary was written on it. The utmost that we can say is that this copy of Dhammapada is compiled in a dialect of the Gandhāra region, having a close kinship, in orthography and other linguistic traits, with the dialects of Asoka's Rock edicts at Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra.

(iii) The Mixed Sanskrit Original of the Fa-kheu-king.—It is stated in the preface of the Chinese translation, known as the Fa-kheu-king, that its original, consisting of 500 verses and 22 chapters, was carried by Wai-chi-lan from India to China "in the third year of the reign of Hwang-wu (A. D. 123)," and was translated into Chinese by the same Indian Shaman with the help of another Indian named Tsiang-im.¹ From a comparison of the Fa-kheu-king with the Pāli Dhammapada, Samuel Beal is led to suppose that "the original manuscript brought to China was the same as that known in Ceylon, the differences which occur between the two being attributable to special reasons existing at the time of the translation."² He has sought to explain away the difference as to the total number of the verses,—423 of the Pāli text and 500 of the original of the Fa-kheu-king—by the assumption that "in the Buddhist calculation the next highest round number is frequently used to denote the exact number intended."³ We cannot surely venture to dispute Mr. Beal's surmise until the original of the Chinese translation is discovered or an authentic tradition makes it known that the text used by the Chinese translator was other than the Pāli. But we find it difficult to subscribe to his opinion when it is expressly stated in the preface to the Chinese translation that the original consisted of 500 verses distributed into 26 chapters, and in the 'Memoirs of Eminent Priests' (K'ao-sui-k'uei, A. D. 519) that the original was a Sanskrit text.¹ Remembering, moreover, that the original of the Fa-kheu-king is said to be a work of a Dharmatrāta or Dharmaraksita, a name so famous in the tradition of the Sārvastivāda sect of Buddhism, it does not seem improbable that the Indian text, a book of the Kṣudraka-nikāya of the canon, was a Sarvāstivāda work. We are, however, aware that such an opinion as this cannot be shown to harmonise with the account of the development of the entire Dhammapada literature. Reserving this important point for discussion in a separate section, we may do well to give, on the basis of Beal's study, a tabular statement of the chapters and verses composing the Pāli Dhammapada and the Fa-kheu-king Original respectively with a view to facilitate comparison between the two.

The Fa-kheu-king Original had a commentary of the Avadāna type, which was translated into Chinese "by two Shamans of the western Tsin dynasty (A.D. 265 to A.D. 313)" under the title of "Fā-kheu-pi-ü,—i.e. parables connected with the book of scriptural texts."¹ With regard to this work Beal says: ".....it contains certain parables, or tales, connected with the verses which follow them, and which prompted their delivery....The method adopted in this work is to give one or two tales, and a verse or more, as the Moral. The chapters are identical with the Fā-kheu-king—the only difference being that the verses or gāthas are fewer—they are, in fact, only a selection from the whole to meet the requirements of the story preceding them. This arrangement is in agreement with the original design of the work. Buddhaghosha, we are told, gives for each verse a parable to illustrate the meaning of the verse, and believed to have been uttered by Buddha in his intercourse with his disciples, or in preaching to the multitudes that came to hear him. And so here we have a tale for each verse, delivered by Buddha for the benefit of his disciples, or others. As to the character of these stories, some of them are puerile and uninteresting. But if I mistake not, they are of a description not opposed to the character of the age to which they are assigned by the Chinese¹. Beal's English version is made from the Chinese Fa-kheu-pi-u, which is a commentarial selection from the Fa-kheu-king, differing from the Pāli commentary by the absence of prose exegesis.

(iv) Dharmapada quoted in the Mahāvastu.—A whole chapter, viz. the Sahasravarga, containing 24 stanzas, has been quoted in the Mahāvastu (III., pp. 434-36) expressly from a Dharmapada text ("dharmapadeṣu sahasravargaḥ," ibid., p. 434). Besides, in the same work a few consecutive verses, numbering not less than 15, have been cited apparently from the Bhikṣuvarga of the same Dharmapada text. Here we may leave out of consideration the isolated verses which are quoted throughout the Mahāvastu and of which the parallel can be traced in other copies of the Dhammapada. The Mahāvastu edited by M. Senart professes to be a Mid-land Recension of the first Book of the Vinaya Piṭaka and belongs to the Lokottaravāda sect, an off-shoot of the Mahāsaṅghika.² The language of the Sahasravarga quoted has no claim to be called pure classical Sanskrit but deserves, on the other hand, to be just what M. Senart called Mixed Sanskrit. It remains to be seen if this copy of the Dhammapada, so much cherished in the Lokottaravāda or Ekavyavahārika literature, can be identified with any one of the three copies of the Dhammapada (one with 500 verses, another with 750, and another with 900), which were known to the authors of the Fa-kheu-king (3rd cent. A.D.).³

(v) The Fa-kheu-king, a Chinese Recension in Translation.—The Fa-kheu-king is, according to the Chinese translators' admission,¹ not a faithful translation of the Indian text which the Shaman Wai-chi-lan carried from India to China in 223 A.D. It is to be regarded as more than a translation, because the Chinese translators had not only tampered with the number and distribution of the verses in the original, but added 13 new chapters in Chinese, making up a total of 39 chapters, 752 verses, and 14,580 words. Similar additions and alterations are also to be met with in the Chinese version of its commentary, the Fa-kheu-pi-u (A.D. 265-313), although in the absence of an English translation of the former, it is difficult for us to compare the text with the commentary and find out how far they agree or differ. It is clear from the Preface to the Fa-kheu-king that the Chinese translators were acquainted with three copies of the Dhammapada,—one with 900 verses, another with 700, and another with 500.² The arrangement of the thirteen additional chapters with their titles and verse-numbers is shown in the following table :

³ Chapters 9-32 of the Fa-kheu-king correspond, with regard to arrangement of chapters, to Pāli chapters 1-24.

We may here point out that instead of one chapter containing reflections on Impermanence or Old Age, the Fa-kheu-king, as appears from its commentary, contains two chapters with titles that can be restored in Sanskrit as amtyavarga and jarāvarga. Counterparts of most of the verses contained in these two chapters can be found in the Prakrit Jaravaga as well as in the first chapter of the Udānavarga, dealing with Impermanence. The last chapter of the Fa-kheu-king is nothing but a Chinese translation of some Indian recension of the Maṅgalasutta. Similarly, chapter 38 appears to be a translation of some Indian Recension of the Mahāmaṅgala-Jātaka. As to the remaining chapters, one cannot but be struck by a few chapters in the Udānavarga, bearing similar titles though not containing the same number and identical verses, e.g., the chapters dealing with Words, ('Speech' in the Udānavarga), Srāvaka ('The Hearer' in the Udānav.). Thus it appears that the Fa-kheu-king is no mere translation of an Indian text, but a recension by itself in translation.

(vi) The Sanskrit recensions :—

(a) Original of the Chinese version of the Dhammapada incorporated in the Chuh-yau-king.—Beal says that the Chuh-yau-king is a third copy of the Chinese version of the Dhammapada which is so much expanded as to consist of 7 volumes, comprising 20 kiuen or books. The translation was made by Chu-fo-nien (or, Fo-nien=Buddhasmṛiti), the Indian who lived during the Yaou-tsin period, about 410 A. D. "In the preface to this version we are told that Dharmatrāta was uncle of Vasumitra, and that he was the original compiler of the stanzas and stories known as Fā-kheu-king. It informs us, moreover, that the old term 'pi-u', i.e. Avadānas, was the same as 'the Dawn,'..... The preface goes on to state that Shaman Saṅghbhadaṅga of Ki-pin (Cabul) came to Tchangan (Siganfu) about the nineteenth year of the period Kien-Yuen. Having travelled back to India and returned with a copy of the present work it was evidently translated by Fon en with the assistance of others the whole number of chapters in this work is thirty-three, and that the last is, like the Pāli, on 'the Brāhmāna.' There are ample commentaries attached to many of the verses .."¹

Rockhill is inclined to identify the Dhammapada text in the Chuh-yau-king with the Udānavarga. "The Udānavarga," says he, "is found also in the Chinese tripitaka. The title of the work is there 'Chuh-yau-king,' or Nidāna sūtra.² It is also divided into thirty-three chapters, the titles of which agree with those of the Tibetan, with the following slight differences.—Chap. iv. is 'Absence of Careless Behaviour'; Chap. v. 'Reflection'; Chap. vi. 'Intelligence'; Chap. xxix. 'The Twins (Yamaka)'. The contents of the two works, as far as has been ascertained, are identical. Both the Chinese and the Tibetan versions attribute the compilation of Udānavarga to Dharma-trāta."³

Dr. Nanjio, on the other hand, notes: "In A. D. 383, there was a Srāmāya of Kī-pin (Cabul) Saṅghabhūti by name, who came to K'ān-ān, the capital of the Former Tshin dynasty, A. D. 380-390 (bringing with him the Ms. of this work?) According to the K'ynen-lu (fasc. 9, fol. 26 a), this work is wanting in Tibetan."⁴ Dr. Nanjio also says that the original was a Sanskrit text.

The Chuh-yau-king, as its title implies, is an avadāna-sūtra, i.e., a Dhammapada commentary rather than a Dhammapada text.

(b) The Udānavarga, another Sanskrit Dhammapada.—This is another Dhammapada text in pure classical Sanskrit, of which a fragmentary manuscript in a later variety of the Gupta script has been found at Turfan. Prof. Pischel was the first to edit portions of this manuscript under the title 'Die Turfan-Reccensionen des Dhammapada.' That this manuscript is of a recension of the Dhammapada of which the Tibetan version has been translated by Rockhill under the name of 'Udānavarga', will be evident from the close agreement between the Sanskrit manuscript and the Tibetan version, in regard to the arrangement of chapters and the number of verses, as shown in the following table taken from Pischel's edition :

Pāli		Sanskrit		Tibetan
—		= II	20	= II 20
XVI	12	= V	27	= V 28
—		= VIII	15	= VIII 15
XXI	16	= XVI	24	= XVI 23

III	11	= XXXI	60	= XXXI 64

The Tibetan translation was made by Vidyāprabhākara probably, as Rockhill suggests, during the reign of King Ral-pa-chan (A.D. 817-842).¹ There is a Tibetan version of its commentary, which was composed by Prajñāvarman, who lived in Kashmere in the 9th century A.D.² There is a fourth or last copy of the Chinese version of a Sanskrit Dhammapada, known as the Fā tsi Yāo-kiñ (Dharmasaṅgraha-mahārtha-gāthā), compiled by Dharmatrāta, and translated by Thien-si-tsai (A.D. 980-1001) of the later Sun dynasty (A.D. 960-1127.) According to Dr. Nanjio, it is a compilation of the verses of the Khu-yāo-kiñ. Beal has nothing more to say regarding this Chinese version³ than that the authorship of its original is assigned to Dharmatrāta, and that it shows no resemblance to the earlier translation, i.e., to the Chu-yāo-king. Having regard to the fact that this Chinese version is almost synchronous with the Tibetan version of the Udānavarga, it remains to be seen if there is any closer similarity between their originals.

(vii) Miscellaneous.—There are a number of small collections of maxims or apophthegms 'conceived wholly in the spirit of the Dhammapada'. Vasubandhu's Gāthāsaṅgraha may be regarded as the prototype of the same. There are two Chinese versions of this Gāthāsaṅgraha, besides two Tibetan versions, in one of which the text is reproduced with the commentary. The collection consists of just 24 stanzas, and what these stanzas are like can be ascertained from Rockhill's English translation of them, appended to his 'Udānavarga.' With regard to this Gāthāsaṅgraha, Mr. Nariman says: "It is a collection of maxims with an intelligent commentary, excerpts from which have been cited by A. Schiefner . . . the commentary shows us the philosopher Vasubandhu also as a humorous evangelist."¹ Vasubandhu, who flourished in the 4th century A.D. is famous in the history of Buddhism not only as a compiler of a standard Sarvāstivāda work, the Abhidharma-kośa, but also as the writer of a standard manual of Yogācāra philosophy. But we must remember that the compilation of such a Gāthāsaṅgraha was in no way peculiar to Vasubandhu, or new in Sarvāstivāda tradition of Vasubandhu's time. It appears from Takakusu's analysis of the Jñāna-prasthāna-śāstra (which is the most authoritative of the seven Abhidharma books of Sarvāstivāda, and dated 2nd century B.C.) that its closing section was a collection of similar maxims, composed in a Mlecchabhāṣā, say, Tāmil. Similar isolated collections of maxims can equally be traced within the four corners of the Pāli Nikāyas.

4. Chronology of the Dhammapada Texts.—The Pāli Dhammapada is one of the recognised books of the Khuddaka-Nikāya which represents one of the five divisions of the existing Sutta Piṭaka. The oldest known Pāli work in which the Dhammapada is expressly referred to is the Milindapañho. The traditional date of this work is placed 500 years after Buddha's demise², i.e., in 43 B.C., while Professor Rhys Davids places the date a considerable time before Buddhaghosa.¹ The Kathāvatthu which according to tradition belongs to the 3rd century B.C. contains many quotations of verses, some of which can be found only in the Dhammapada, and not in any other canonical texts, but none of the sources of the quotations are mentioned. The same remark holds true of the Nettipakaraṇa and the Peṭakōpadesa, which like the Kathāvatthu abound in quotations from the canonical works with this difference that in the former two works some of the sources are mentioned by name, although the verses there that are peculiar to the Dhammapada are quoted without any mention of their source. The Netti and the Peṭakōpadesa are the two companion works of exegetic type which are ascribed to Mahākaccāyana, the putative author of all the earlier works of the Nirutti and Niddesa class. Prof. E Hardy is inclined to place the composition of the Netti in the 1st century, A.D.,² but we have reason to believe that the date can be pushed back to the 2nd century B.C. The Mahāniddesa which is a canonical commentary on the Aṭṭhakavagga, now found incorporated in the Suttanipāta and forming its Fourth Book has been modelled upon Mahākaccāyana's exposition found in the earlier Nikāyas,³ and is not wanting in similar quotations of verses which cannot be found anywhere else in the canon than the Dhammapada. But even an earlier work, the Cullaniddesa, which must have been a pre-Asokan book of exegesis, older than the Suttanipāta and later than the canonical Jātaka Book,⁴ contains similar quotations of verses not to be found in any other text than the Pāli Dhammapada. Considering that the closing date of the Pāli canon is not later than the 2nd century B.C., the latest date for the Mahāniddesa can not be later than the closing period of the canon. Further, in one of Buddhaghosa's commentaries, viz., the Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, there is reference to two schools of enumeration, the Dīghabhāṇaka and the Majjhimabhāṇaka, of the books of the Khuddakamkāya, which, though different in some respects, agree in so far as they distinctly mention the Dhammapada among the books of the Lesser Collection.¹ These two schools along with the Saṃyutta Aṅguttara and the Khuddakabhāṇakas point to a time earlier than the inscriptions at Bharhut which cannot be dated earlier than the 3rd century and later than the 2nd century B.C. The tradition that Appamāda-vagga was recited to king Asoka justifies the presumption that the Pāli Dhammapada existed in the 3rd century B.C. So much about the lower limit of the Pāli Dhammapada.

As regards the lower limit of other copies and recensions, we have seen that the Chinese Fa-kheu-king, dated A.D. 223, presupposes three different Dhammapada selections in Sanskrit — one, its Indian original, with 500 verses, another text with 700 verses, and a third with 900 (p. ix). It has already been shown (pp. x-xi) that the Fa-kheu-king original in Sanskrit was a text different from the Pāli as regards language and number of verses, though agreeing with it in its general form, name, number and succession of chapters. Again, the agreement of the Prakrit Dhammapada with the Pāli and the Fa-kheu-king original in respect of the number of verses and succession of chapters is by far closer than that of the Udānavarga (pp. viii-ix). But there are a number of verses in the Prakrit Dhammapada, notably the 'Uraga' verses at the end of the chapter on the Bhikṣu and some in the Saḥasa and Jara Vagga, which are to be found neither in the Pāli nor in the original of the Fa-kheu-king, but occur in the Udānavarga in the chapters on Bhikṣu, Number and Impermanency. The Prakrit Dhammapada stands distinct from the rest in one respect, viz., that its first chapter is devoted to Mārga—the Buddhist Eightfold Path, combining into one group two separate chapters of the Pāl as we see of the original of the Fa-kheu king viz. the Magga and the Pakinraka (Miscellaneous). The first eight of the additional chapters of the Fa-kheu-king have their counterparts in the Udānavarga, as will be clear from the following table :—

Fa-kheu-king			Rockhill's Udānavarga
Ch	I Impermanency	Ch.	I Impermanency
"	II Insight into wisdom	"	IV Purity
"	III The Disciple	"	XI The Śramaṇa
"	IV Simple Faith	"	X Faith
"	V Moral Duties	"	VI Morality (śīlaś)
"	VI Reflection	.	..	"	XV Reflection (Smṛti)
"	VII Words	.	..	"	VII Speech
"	VIII Nirvāṇa	.	..	"	XXVI Nirvāṇa

These additional chapters of the Fa-kheu-king force us to look for an earlier Dhammapada text other than the Pāli, its Indian original and the Prakrit, and we are driven in the last resort to trace their immediate background to one of the two Dhammapadas with 700 and 900 verses, known, in 223 A.D., to Wai-chi-lan, the author of the Fa-kheu-king. The text must be one closely resembling the Udānavarga, if not identical with it. It is the text portion of the original of the Chuh-yau-king which alone can satisfy this test. We have reason to believe that the text portion was extant before the time of Wai-chi-lan, i.e., roughly speaking, before the 3rd century A.D. For the Chuh-yau-king which is a Chinese version, dated 383 A.D., presupposes an Indian commentary in Sanskrit that in its turn presupposes an earlier work, i.e., the Sanskrit text comprising 33 chapters similar to those of the Udānavarga. Here we have got to make allowance not only for the interval of time separating the Chinese version from its original, i.e., the Sanskrit commentary, but also for another interval separating the latter from a still earlier work, which is no other than the Sanskrit text. In ascertaining the latter interval one must also consider that before the commentary was written, the text must have enjoyed some amount of popularity and made its importance sufficiently felt in the community. At any rate, the interval of just 160 years (383 A.D.—223 A.D.)

is the shortest possible time which is needed to make the text earlier than Wai-chi-lan's visit to China.

Even if this surmise as to the possibility of Wai-chi-lan's acquaintance with the Sanskrit text portion of the Chuh-yau-king be correct (as we believe it is), one must yet enquire whether the total number of its verses justifies its identification with the text with 900 verses above referred to. Unfortunately, as we are informed by our colleague Mr. R. Kimura, the task of ascertaining the total number of verses in it is far from easy for the simple reason that the verses in the existing Chinese edition are not numbered, nor properly kept distinct from one another. But counting the verses in so far as they are separated by the commentary portion intervening in each chapter, he finds himself in a position to assure us that whatever the exact total, it certainly exceeds 900, though it is by no means over 1000. If so, of the two texts with 700 and 900 verses, known to Wai-chi-lan, the latter must be said to approximate the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king.

Now, arguing from the close resemblance which exists between the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king and the Udānavarga, so far as is known to us in its entirety through Rockhill's translation from the Tibetan, we can accept the information supplied by Mr. R. Kimura regarding the total in the former as correct. For, although the latter is dated 982-1000 A.D., the total in it does not exceed 989 verses, or, 1000 in round numbers. But it must be noted that the total in Rockhill's Udānavarga cannot be regarded as a precisely correct number, and that for three reasons : (i) that there is a slight difference as to the number of verses in almost each chapter common to Pischel's edition of the manuscript fragments of the Udānavarga and Rockhill's translation of the Tibetan version of the same text; (ii) that at least in two instances we notice that a verse which would be counted as one in the Pāli Dhammapada, has been counted as two (cf. Rockhill, III. vv. 12-13, XXIII, vv. 82-83) (iii) that there are in it a few repetitions of which we have been noticed by Rockhill. Thus its total 989 can be reduced to 981 [989—(2+6)]. How far this process of reduction can proceed in the text itself it is difficult to say. There are no doubt a number of mechanical multiplication of verses which has practically no raison d'être, and has a marked tendency to swell up the volume without bringing out any new idea. We have no right to deduct the verses thus multiplied from the Udānavarga, but must on the other hand count them as they occur in it. General reduction is however possible in relation to earlier texts, if any, where certain verses forming a sub-group in a chapter of the Udānavarga are found less in number. The case in hand could be fairly proved, if by the process of reduction, just mentioned, the total 981 could be further reduced to a number approximating 900.

Dr. Nanjio says that the fourth or last Chinese version of the Dhammapada, the Fā-tsi-sun-yāo-kin, dated A.D. 982-1000, is no other than the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king (p. xvi). But from a comparison of a few chapters of the two Chinese versions with the kind help of our friend Mr. R. Kimura, we are constrained to admit some differences between them, though we can only so far readily concede to Dr. Nanjio that they show a general agreement in many respects. Remembering that a similar agreement can also be shown to exist between the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king and Rockhill's Udānavarga, as well as judging by the dates of the Tibetan version and the fourth Chinese version, we may be justified in holding that their originals were the same, making due allowance for slight variation as may exist between two manuscripts of one and the same text. With regard to the date of the Sanskrit Udānavarga, one can definitely say that it was compiled some time before the time of its commentator Prajñāvarman, who lived in the 9th century A.D., while this much is certain as regards the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king that it was extant before the 3rd century of the Christian era. Not knowing any other copy of the Dhammapada than one with 900 verses which Wai-chi-lan could avail himself of in adding a few chapters resembling those in the Udānavarga, we are naturally tempted to identify the same with the text portion of the original of the Chuh-yau-king, and we are confident that we shall not be found far too wrong in doing so.

Turning to the copy of the Dhammapada with 700 verses, known to Wai-chi-lan, we at once see that it was different from the Pāli with 423 verses, the Fa-kheu-king original with 500 verses and the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king just identified with the text with 900 verses. Thus only two texts are left to be examined, viz., the Prakrit and the Dhammapada in Mixed Sanskrit of which a complete chapter has been quoted in the Mahāvastu (p. xii). As regards the Prakrit Dhammapada, it is impossible for us, in the absence of a complete manuscript thereof or of a tradition supplying a definite information about it, to say exactly how many verses it altogether contained. But judging by the proportion of verses in the chapters common to the three recensions, viz., the Pāli, the Fa-kheu-king original and the Prakrit, we feel inclined to think that the total of the Prakrit verses stood midway between 500 and 700. The following table will make our position clear :—

Pāli		²² Original of Fa-kheu-king		Prakrit
II 12	...	II 20	..	II 25
IV 16	.	IV 17	..	IV 15

Bearing in mind that the total number of verses in the Pāli Dhammapada is 423 and that in the Fa-kheu king original 500 we can test whether the above three totals are in keeping with the ratio of 500 : 423.

(1) $\frac{423 \times 198}{162} = 517$ which roughly gives the total verse-number of the Fa-kheu-king original.

(2) $\frac{423 \times 232}{162} = 605\frac{7}{9}$, i.e., 606 which roughly gives the total verse-number of the Prakrit text.

The totals obtained (Pa. 423 ; F. O. 517 ; Pr. 606) might be further tested by a standard ratio provided by the verse-numbers of the Sahasra-group in the 5 recensions mentioned in the sub-joined table :—

Pāli	Fa-kheu-king original	Prakrit	Dhammapada quoted in the Mahāvastu	Udānavarga
16	16	17	24	34

Taking in succession the total of the Pāli text and that of the Fa-kheu-king original as the standard number, the relative position of the recensions will appear as follows :—

- (1) $\frac{423 \times 17}{16} = 449\frac{7}{16}$, i.e., 450 (Pr.) ;
 $\frac{423 \times 24}{16} = 634\frac{1}{2}$, i.e., 635 (M. V. D.) ;
 $\frac{423 \times 34}{16} = 898\frac{7}{8}$, i.e., 899 (U. V.).
- (2) $\frac{500 \times 17}{16} = 531\frac{1}{4}$, i.e., 532 (Pr.) ;
 $\frac{500 \times 24}{16} = 750$ (M. V. D.) ;
 $\frac{500 \times 34}{16} = 1062\frac{1}{2}$, i.e., 1063 (U. V.).

Comparing these two series of totals and taking all the recensions of the Dhammapada into consideration, we cannot but persuade ourselves to believe that there were no less than six Indian copies of the Dhammapada with 423, 500, 600, 700, 900 and 1000 verses, and that these copies are no other than those represented respectively by the Pāli, the Fa-kheu-king original, the Prakrit, the Mahāvastu Dhammapada, the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king and the Udānavarga. Of these copies, the first five were well-known before the 3rd century A.D., while the date of the Udānavarga falls in between the 4th and the 9th century A.D. Applying the verse-total as a test of priority and posteriority we are justified in concluding that the Pāli with the minimum total 423 is the oldest copy of the Dhammapada and the Udānavarga with the maximum total 1000 (in round numbers) the latest. The copy which stands close to the Pāli is the Sanskrit original of the Fa-kheu-king; the copy which is one degree removed from the latter is the Prakrit, while the Mahāvastu Dhammapada and the Sanskrit original of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king occupy in order two intermediate positions between the Prakrit text and the Udānavarga. This chronology cannot, however, be taken to be conclusive until it is further tested in the light of other evidences and harmonised with the general history of Buddhist literature and thought. We propose to examine these evidences under the following heads :

- (a) argument from the number and succession of chapters ;
- (b) argument from the multiplication of particular verses ;
- (c) argument from traditions.

(a) Argument from the number and succession of chapters—
The four Indian copies of the Dhammapada of which the tables of contents are definitely known to us fall into two pairs, each showing a complete agreement in regard to the number and succession of chapters : (1) the Pāli and the Fa-kheu-king original containing altogether 26 chapters, and (2) the text portion of the original of the Chuh-yau-king and the Udānavarga containing 33. All these copies agree in so far as the succession of two closing chapters is concerned. For in each of them the last chapter is the Brāhmaṇavagga and the last but one is the chapter on the Bhikkhu. Further, they must be said to resemble one another, inasmuch as they have many chapters bearing same titles. The two pairs differ, however, widely from each other regarding the order of succession of the remaining chapters, particularly that of the first three. As regards the first pair of texts, their first three chapters are arranged in the following order :—

1. Yamakavagga forming the 29th chapter in the 2nd pair.
2. Appamādavagga forming the 4th chapter.
3. Cittavagga forming the 31st chapter.

On the other hand, the first three chapters in the second pair of texts are arranged as shown below :—

1. Anityavarga corresponding with the Jarāvagga—the 11th chapter in the 1st pair.
2. Kāmavarga having its counterpart in the Piya-vagga—the 16th chapter of the 1st pair.
3. Trṣṣāvarga being an amplified version of the Taṇhāvagga of the 1st pair, placed immediately before the Bhikkhu.

It is impossible to make a definite statement regarding the number and succession of chapters in the Prakrit text and in the Mahāvastu Dhammapada, though we are on a somewhat surer ground as regards the former work. As we have already noticed, the Prakrit Dhammapada shows a far closer kinship in its general form with the 1st pair of texts than it does with the 2nd pair, particularly the arrangement of three chapters in it, viz., 2-4, is exactly on a par with that in the Pāli and in the Fa-kheu-king original. Moreover, whatever the precise succession of the Tasavaga, the Bhikkhu and the Bramana in it, M. Senart's Fac-simile of the Plate B of the Kharoṣṭhi Ms. goes to prove that they are closely bound up in thought as in the texts of the 1st pair. Arguing from the arrangement of the 1st three chapters, the two pairs of texts can be shown to represent two distinct periods of literary growth within Buddhism, the earlier period being represented by the Pāli Dhammapada and the Fa-kheu-king original. For the sequence of thought in the first three chapters of these two texts is so much in line with that in a Chāndogya passage that one can not but think the former was merely a systematic carrying out of the latter. In other words, the sequence can be regarded as a proof of these Dhammapada texts standing close to the Chāndogya Upaniṣad and representing an earlier stage of Buddhism. The first chapter of Twin-verses (Yamakavagga) teaches that manā in the sense of cet nā—volition or intention—is psychologically the motive for action and determines its moral effect according as the intention of the agent is good or bad. It is followed by a chapter on ‘Earnestness’ (Appamādavagga) which inculcates the necessity of an active exercise of the will or religious aspiration for the attainment of the highest good which is the quintessence of the older Indian conception of faith (saddhā). This naturally leads to another chapter, the Cittavagga, where the nature of mind, as commonly known, is described in order to bring out the idea that the necessity of constant striving, mindfulness and self-control implied in ‘earnestness’ arises from the very constitution of mind. How this trend of thought was anticipated in the Chāndogya passage will be clear from the quotations below :—

I (a) “Mano vāva vāco bhūyo..... vācam ca nāma ca mano’ nubhavati—sa yadā manasā manasyati mantrān adhiyiyeti, athādhīte karmāṇi kurvīteti, atha kurute putrāṁśca paśūṁśca iccheyeti, athēcchata imaṁ ca lokaṁ amuṁ ca iccheyeti, athēcchate mano.”

(Chāndogya, VII. 3. 1.)

(b) “Manopubbaṅgamā dhammā manoseṭṭhā manomayā, manasā ce padaṭṭhena bhāsatī vā karoti vā, tato naṁ dukkham anveti cakkam va bahato padam.
Manopubbaṅgamā dhammā manoseṭṭhā manomayā manasā ce pasaṇṇena bhāsatī vā karoti vā tato naṁ sukham anveti chāyā va anapāyini.”

(Dhp. I. vv. 1-2.)

II (a) “Saṁkalpo vāva manaso bhūyān, yadā vai saṁkalpayate atha manasyati, atha vācam irayati, tāmu nāmnirayati, nāmuṁ mantrā ekaṁ bhavanti, mantreṣu karmāṇi.....
Sa yaḥ saṁkalpaṁ brahmēti upāste, kliptānvai sa lokān dhruvān dhruvaḥ pratiṣṭhitān.”

(Chāndogya, VII. 4. 1-3)

- (b) " Appamādo amatapadam, pamādo maccuno padam, appamattā na miyanti, ye pamattā yathā matā.

(Dhp., II. v 1)

- III (a) "Cittam vāra saṃkalpād bhūyo, yadā vai cetayate atha saṃkalpayate, atha manasyati, atha vācarirayati, tānu nāmnirayati, nānni mantrā ekam bhavanti, mantreṣu karmāṇi."

(Chāndogya, VII. 5,1)

- (b) "Na taṃ mātāpātā kayirā aññe vāpi ca nātākā Sammāpanihitaṃ cittaṃ seyyaso naṃ tato kare."

(Dhp. III. v. 11)

This sequence of thought is entirely lost sight of in the second pair of texts—the text portion of the Chub-y u-king original and the Udānavarga—the first three chapters of which deal respectively with impermanence, vanity of human wishes and desire. The trend of thought is that when a man reflects upon the fact of impermanence all around, he cannot but realise the vanity of human wishes and discover its root in a natural craving for pleasure and enjoyment. Thus the two pairs of texts present a radical change in tone from the optimism of earlier thought to the ascetic or pessimistic outlook of later reflection. But was this change sudden or it came about gradually? The Prakrit Dhammapada bears out the fact that the change did not come about surreptitiously. As we have already noticed above, its first chapter is devoted to the praise of the Buddhist Eight-fold Path, while the succession of the following two chapters is the same as that of the Pāli. The trend of thought implied is that Nirvāṇa or the Supreme goal of Buddhism is reachable by the Eight-fold Path which is but a symbol of 'earnestness' which aims at complete control over mind. Viewed in this light, the Mahāvastu Dhammapada seems to fall in line with the Prakrit text, though nothing can be definitely stated regarding the former work. If, however, this surmise is found to be correct, the six copies will fall into three parts representing three successive periods or stages of literary growth. A happy result of such a classification will be that it will enable us to form a definite idea about the contents of all the Dhammapada texts by the aid of those which are now accessible to us. If we know the Pāli Dhammapada, we are expected to know almost the whole of the Fa-kheu-king original; a knowledge of the Prakrit text will help us in knowing the contents of the Mahāvastu Dhammapada; lastly, if we have read the Udānavarga, we have really known the whole of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king original.

In order to justify the chronology of the three pairs we must enquire as to whether or no the Prakrit text serves as a link of transition between the Pāli and the Udānavarga as regards the multiplication of the number of chapters. The following investigation will make it clear that it does serve as a connecting link. It is a curious fact that the additional chapters of the Fa-kheu-king, i.e., the chapters which were added by the Chinese translators to the translation of a text of 26 chapters similar to the Pāli, presuppose a Buddhist anthology like the Pāli Suttanipāta as the subjoined table will set forth :

	Fa-kheu-king		Suttanipāta.
Sec.	I Impermanency III	9 Salla Sutta
„	II Insight into Wisdom II	10 Uṭṭhāna Sutta
„	III The Disciple I	5 Cunda Sutta
„	IV Simple Faith I	10 Ālavaka Sutta
„	VII Love I	8 Metta Sutta
„	VIII Words III	3 Subhāsita Sutta
„	XXXIX Good Fortune II	4 Mahāmaṅgala Sutta

In the same way we can account for the additional chapters in the Udānavarga and a posteriori for those in the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king original. If we scan their additional chapters, we at once discover that they are modelled upon certain poems of a work similar to the Sutta Nipāta, and that so far as the r component verses are concerned they are nothing bnt a combination of a Sutta Nipāta, a Dhammapada and a Jātaka Book. We subjoin a table in illustration of the point :—

	Udānavarga	Other texts
Chap. I Impermanency	...	Salla Sutta (S. N. III. 9) + Dasaratha Jātaka + Mugapakkha Jātaka + Jarā-vagga (Dhp.)
" II Kāma		Kāmasutta (S. N. IV. 1) + Kāma Jātaka + Piyavagga (Dhp.)
" VIII Speech		Subhāsita Sutta (S. N. III. 3) + Kokāliya Sutta (S. N. III. 10) + Puppha-vagga (Dhp.) + Nirayavagga (Dhp.)
" XXXII Bhikṣu		Uruga Sutta (S. N. I. 1) + Bhikkhu-vagga (Dhp.)

Similarly the Sutta Nipāta and the Jātaka Book can be pointed out as canonical sources of most of the additional verses in Prakrit, e.g., the additional verses in the Bhikkhuvaga are similar to those in the Uruga Sutta (S. N. I.), while those in the Jaravaga presuppose the Salla Sutta (S. N. III. 9) and such Jātakas as the Dasaratha, the Ayoghara and the Mugapakkha.

The Pāli Dhammapada (and a posteriori the Fa-kheu-king original) differs from the Prakrit text and the Udānavarga, inasmuch as it does not contain a single verse of which the canonical source is no other than the Sutta Nipāta as we now have it. For instance, its Brāhmaṇavagga is mainly constituted of verses from the Vāsetṭha Sutta which is incorporated not only in the Sutta Nipāta, but also in the Majjhima Nikāya. The Nāgavagga contains a few verses which can be traced in the Khaggavisāṇasutta, but seeing that this particular sutta has been commented upon in the Cullaniddesa along with the poems of the Pārāyaṇa Group, one may be justified in thinking that it existed as a separate poem before its incorporation in the 1st book of the Sutta Nipāta. At any rate, as we proceed from the Pāli Dhammapada towards the Udānavarga, it becomes increasingly clear that the Sutta Nipāta came to occupy a more and more prominent place in the later texts

(b) Argument from the multiplication of particular verses :—Besides the common verses, each copy of the Dhammapada contains some that were evidently drawn upon canonical sources, left untouched by the compilers of other copies. Further, each copy contains a number of verses peculiar to itself, and these, in the absence of evidence proving the contrary, must be regarded as compositions of its compiler. In discussing the question of chronology we have to leave out of consideration the verses that were either newly added or composed on a new model, because chronological data can be derived only from those verses which were multiplied, rather mechanically, on a common basis. The process of multiplication just referred to is twofold : (1) the insertion within one original verse or group some new lines constructed out of some set Buddhist expressions, and (2) the substitution of new expressions. Three instances may suffice to illustrate the first process :—

I Pāli—Mā pamādam anuyuñjetha mā kāmaratisanthavaṃ Appamatto hi jhāyanto pappoti paramaṃ sukhaṃ.

Prakrit—apramadi pramodia ma gami ratisabhamu apramato hi jhayatu chaya dukhasa pramuni ○ apramadarata bhoda khano yu ma uvacai khanatita hi śoyati niraeṣu samapita ○ apramadarata bhoda sadhami supavedite drugha udhvaradha atmana pagasana va kuñaru ○ nai kalu pramadasa aprati asavachaye pramata duku amoti siha ba muyamatia ○ nai pramadasamayu aprati asavachayi apramato hi jhayatu pranoti paramu suhu ○

One must note how the counterpart of one Pali verse has been multiplied in Prakrit to five by the insertion of 8 extra lines. But a more apposite instance is afforded by the second set of verses (p. 208)—

II Pāli—Yānimaṇi apatthāni alāpuneva sārade Kāpotakāni atthim tam disvāna ka ratī ?

that the Chinese versions, as confessed by the translators themselves, are far from being faithful¹: (ii) that as appears from Beal's translation of the Fa-kheu-pi-u, some of the verses of the Pāli Jarāvagga are hopelessly confused and the order of some has been violently tampered with.² It is quite likely that the order was tampered with even in the original commentary. The number of 'Jarā'-verses in the Fa-kheu-king is said to have been 14, i.e., 3 in excess of the Pāli, while comparing Beal's translation with the Pāli Jarāvagga, we suspect that the right number is not 14, but 12, i.e., just 1 in excess of the Pāli. The total number of verses in the Fa-kheu-king original was, according to the translators' own statement, 500, whereas we have seen on p. xi that by adding up the additional number of verses as distributed in the chapters corresponding to the Pāli we get a total of 502. If the above calculation of the 'Jarā'-verses be correct, we at once get the traditional total of 500 by subtracting 2 from 502. The total number 12 of the verses of the Jarā-group can be accounted for by the fact that the one verse resembling the Pāli was expanded into two distinct verses. If we can rightly suppose that the Divyāvadāna verses were quotations (perhaps a little more sanskritised form of quotations) from an older Avadāna work such as the original of the Fa-Kheu-pi-u, the order of the verses must have been inverted in the older work itself, and this conjecture is fully borne out by the grouping in the Chinese translation. The fact of inversion itself requires a word of explanation. One must admit that it presupposes an earlier process of multiplication and improvement on an older verse similar to the Pāli. We have seen that the Prakrit verses amply attest and illustrate the required process. Two distinct verses resulted from an attempt to expand the ideas of the two Pāli lines, taken separately, thereby improving the simile of the pumpkins and the decaying bones in the first line (pp. 209-210). Even then, the direct source of the Prakrit verses would not be fully determined by the model of the Pāli verse. For there are very many dialectical forms which have a tinge of Mixed Sanskrit. At the same time we cannot hold that the Prakrit had drawn upon the Divyāvadāna and the Avadāna original of the Fa-kheu-pi-u, as in these two works the order of the two verses, betraying a process of their growth from one verse by thrusting two lines into it, has been inverted. Failing to obtain the much-needed order in Mixed Sanskrit in these two works, one must in the last resort look for it in the Fa-kheu-king original. The Udānavarga verse seems to represent a stage later than the inversion of the verse-order, that is to say, later than the Fa-kheu-pi-u original and the Divyāvadāna verses. Seeing that the Udānavarga verse occurs in the same form in Vasubandhu's Gāthāsaṅgraha, itself but a selection from a Dhammapada in Classical Sanskrit, we are led to think that the verse similarly occurs in the original of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king (the Sanskrit Dhammapada with 900 verses).

² The order of first 3 verses is exactly the same as in Pāli. The 4th verse is a combination of the first foot of the Pāli verse No. 6 and the counterpart of a verse like the first in Prakrit. The order of the next 3 verses does not differ from that of the Pāli. The next 2 verses correspond with the 10th and 11th of the Pāli. The verse No. 10 is nothing but a counterpart of the second Prakrit v The last 2 correspond with the Pāli, Nos. 8 and 9

Thus the entire process of multiplication and reduction suggests the following links of change and points of enquiry: (1) the origin of a Mixed Sanskrit counterpart of the Pāli verse, (2) the manipulation of two distinct verses in Mixed Sanskrit by thrusting two new lines into one original verse, (3) the transliteration of these verses into Prakrit, (4) the inversion of their order in Mixed Sanskrit, (5) the further Sanskritisation of the verses in their inverted order, (6) the inclusion of the Classical Sanskrit form of the first verse in inverted order, (7) the quotation of it in Vasubandhu's Gāthāsaṅgraha, and (8) ~~the final~~ in the Udānavarga. If this be applied as a test of chronology, the Pāli Dhammapada will appear to be older than the Fa-kheu-king original in Mixed Sanskrit, the latter than the Prakrit text, the Prakrit text than the Avadāna original of the Fa-kheu-pi-u, the Avadāna original than the Divyāvadāna verses, these verses than the Sanskrit text with 900 verses, this Sanskrit text than Vasubandhu's Gāthāsaṅgraha, and the Gāthāsaṅgraha than the Udānavarga which is the latest copy of the Dhammapada. The chronological position of the Mahāvastu Dhammapada in Mixed Sanskrit, with the text of 700 verses, remains yet to be ascertained. Now we shall examine the third instance.

III Pāli—yo ca vassasataṃ jantu aggiṃ paricare vane
Ekaṇca bhāvitattānaṃ muhuttam api pūjaye
Sā yeva pūjanā seyyo yaṇ ce vassasataṃ hutam.

Prakrit—ya ja vaṣaṣata jatu agi pariyare vane

eka ji bhavitatmana muhuta viva puae sameva puyana ṣebha ya ji vaṣaṣata huta ○

Fa-kheu-pi-u—"If a man lives a hundred years, and engages the (Se VI Metta, whole of his time and attention in religious offerings to the gods, sacrificing elephants and horses, and other things, all this is not equal to one act of pure love in saving life."

Mahāvastu—Yo ca varṣaṣataṃ jīve agniparicaram caret
Dhammapada Patrābhāro chavāvāsī karonto vividham tapaṃ Yo caikaṃ bhāvitatmānaṃ muhūrtamapi pūjayet
Sā eka pūjanā śreyo na ca varṣaṣataṃ hutam.

Udānavarga—"If a man live for a hundred years in forest, wholly relying on fire (Agni), and if he but for one single ent pays homage to a whom on the self this homage is greater than for complete verses in Prakrit as well as in the Fa-kheu-pi-u and the Mahāvastu Dhammapada. The two verses seem to have been constructed out of one older verse of three lines by thrusting one extra line within its first two lines. The added line differs in each case as regards its expressions. But seeing that the verse occurs in one of its additional chapters, we have reason to think that the model presupposed, in this particular case, by the Prakrit text, is rather the Mahāvastu Dhammapada or the text with 700 verses which was commonly used by the people, according to the Chinese translators' statement, in their time. If so, the Prakrit text must be taken to be later in point of date than and a combination of the Fa-kheu-king original and the Mahāvastu Dhammapada. Now let us examine the second process of multiplication in order to see whether any fresh light could be thrown on the point at issue.

The second process differs from the first by the fact that it has served to multiply the common verses by the substitution of certain set Buddhist expressions as well as by the construction of a new group of verses on the model of an older one. Its historical importance mainly consists in bringing into prominence some moral qualities or virtues implied in an older verse or in a group of verses, thereby setting forth a greater and greater analytical faculty and power of manipulation exercised by the later compilers. In illustration of it, we can first examine the famous 'Supraudhu'-group (p. 105-6). We notice that the Pāli group consists of six verses and the same is the case with the Fa-kheu-king original as can be inferred from Beal's translation of its commentary (Sec. III. "Śrāvaka", pp. 64-55).

The Prakrit group, as it now survives, is an exact counterpart of the Pāli, but 17 verses being absent from the existing Kharoṣṭhī Ms. immediately after the sixth verse, it is difficult to ascertain the number of verses contained in the whole group. Having regard to the fact that the group in the Udānavarṇa that are common, it is natural to think that multiplication of the number passed through some intermediate stages, and it is clear from the arrangement of the Udānavarga that these stages were no less than four. Probably in the first two stages, the number was multiplied by constructing some additional verses within the original group, and in the third stage some additional verses were constructed by the substitution of one or two synonyms of Nirvāṇa, while in the Udānavarga a few more synonyms came to be substituted.

Turning to the Number-group (Sahasavaga) (p. 154-6.), we detect that it comprises some four sub-groups, typified by the following four catch-words indicated below by their Pāli forms :

- (i) Sahassam api ce vācā,
- (ii) Māse māse sahasena,
- (iii) Yo ca vassasataṃ jīve,
- and (iv) Yo ca vassasataṃ jantu.

We have seen (p. xxiv.) that there is a complete agreement as regards the number of verses in the Number-group between the Pāli Dhammapada and the Fa-kheu-king original, that the Prakrit chapter contains 17 verses, the Mahāvastu Dhammapada 24 and the Udānavarga chapter 34. In the absence of a faithful translation of the Fa-kheu-king original, it is impossible to state as to what verses were really contained in its Number-group. Beal's translation of the Fa-kheu-pi-u shows that the chapter in the Chinese version contains a few verses of the second sub-group, specified above, of which the counterparts are met with in all the copies except the Pāli. The comparison of the Prakrit verses with those in the Mahāvastu Dhammapada reveals a very close agreement between them. Considering that some of the verses of this sub-group occur in one of the additional chapters of the Fa-kheu-pi-u, we cannot but suppose that they were derived from a text other than its original. The Pāli text supplies a counterpart of the first line of each of these verses and that of the second line of one verse in Prakrit :

(i) Māse māse sahasena yo yajetha sataṃ samam.

(Sahasav., v. 7, 1st line).

(ii) Māse māse kusaggena bālo bhuñjetha bhojanam,
Na so saṅkhatadhammānam kalam agghati soḷasim.

(Bālav., v. 11, note 2nd line)

Judging by the arrangement of the Prakrit verses (6-16), we at once perceive that the multiplication passed through no less than two intermediate stages, in the first of which the number multiplied by the first process and in the second by the second.

The chapter on the Bhikkhu contains a sub-group which will seem highly important in determining the relative position of the Dhammapada texts. We quote it below with a view to facilitating comparison :—

of each of these verses and that of the second line of one verse in Prakrit :

(i) Māse māse sahasena yo yajetha sataṃ samaṃ.

(Sahasav., v. 7, 1st line)

(ii) Māse māse kusaggena bālo bhuñjetha bhojanāṃ, Na so saṅkhatadhammānaṃ kalam agghati soḷāsīṃ.

Judging by the arrangement of the Prakrit verses (6-16), we at once perceive that the multiplication passed through no less than two intermediate stages, in the first of which the number multiplied by the first process and in the second by the second.

The chapter on the Bhikkhu contains a sub-group which will seem highly important in determining the relative position of the Dhammapada texts. We quote it below with a view to facilitating comparison :—

In particular instance, we have four Prakrit verses in the Pāli while the Mahāvastu Dhammapada and the Udānavarga verses are not exact counterparts of any previous group. They are on the contrary a combination of verses found in all the previous groups, supplemented by a few which were newly constructed by the compiler of the Sanskrit text. Though the counterparts of any of the groups is not to be found in the Fa-kheu-king and its commentary, it is very likely that some sort of transformation also took place in their originals. Nevertheless, the Prakrit verses cannot be satisfactorily accounted for otherwise than by the hypothesis that they are a combination of elements from two older texts, viz., the Fa-kheu-king original and the Mahāvastu Dhammapada.

Thus applying the twofold process of multiplication of common verses as a test of chronology, we are led to think that the Prakrit text occupies a central position, it being later than the Pāli, the Fa-kheu-king original and the Mahāvastu Dhammapada, and earlier than the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king and the Udānavarga. The Prakrit text with some 600 verses was a combination of two older texts with 500 and 700 verses, just as the Fa-kheu-king, considered as a Chinese recension in translation, was a combination, with its 752 verses, of three older texts with 500, 700 and 900 verses.

(c) Argument from traditions—The reader has already been referred (on p. xix) to a tradition in the Chronicles of Ceylon proving that the Dhammapada was a well-known Pāli work in the time of King Asoka¹. The internal evidence of the work does not help us much in determining its date of compilation. The Nāgavagga contains an interesting verse² moralising upon the behaviour of a state elephant, named Dhanapālaka, when the animal was first caught and put under training. It appears from the commentary that the elephant was in possession of the King of Kāśī.¹ Subsequently the elephant came into the possession of King Bimbisāra, probably as part of the wedding gift from Mahāpasenādi, the King of Kāśī-Kosala. The elephant is no other than one called Nālāgiri² in the Pāli Nidānakathā, set upon the Buddha by Prince Ajātasattu at the instigation of Devadatta. The earliest trace of the legend about the taming of this elephant by the Buddha can be found in a bas-relief at Bharhut, bearing the inscription "Dhanapāla hatthiṇāgamana". The legend must have come into existence sometime before the construction of the railing of the Bharhut Stūpa, i.e., before the 2nd or 3rd century B.C. But the Pāli Dhammapada has nothing to do with this particular legend which seems to have resulted from an after-thought on the part of the Buddhist theologians. The chapter on the Buddha goes, however, to prove that at the time of the compilation of the Pāli Dhammapada the Buddha was sufficiently deified and that the legends about the machinations of Māra and his daughters were yet in the making. As shown elsewhere,³ the process of deification of the Buddha through the Birth-stories was synchronous with the history of schisms within the Buddhist Order. Seeing that the date of composition of the Jātakas in their oldest form cannot be earlier than the first century of Buddha's demise, one must admit that the date of the Pāli Dhammapada falls within the 4th and the 3rd century B.C.

Tradition attributes to one Dharmatrāta the compilation of each one of the three copies of the Dhammapada, viz., the original of the Fa-kheu-king or the text with 500 verses, the original of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king or the text with 900 verses, and the Udānavarga or the latest Sanskrit copy with 1000 verses. In the Chinese preface to the Chuh-yau-king

Dharmatrāta is said to have been the uncle (rather maternal uncle, as M. Sylvain Lévi points out,) of Vasumitra.¹ According to Tāranātha, there were two Dharmatrātas, a Sthavira and a Bhadanta.² The Sthavira was a contemporary of the Brāhman Rāhula and one of the four teachers of the Vaibhāṣikas, the remaining three teachers being Ghōṣaka (Āśvaghoṣa), Vasumitra and Buddhadeva (?).³ Candrakīrti, too, mentions two Dharmatrātas, viz., a Sthavira and a Bhadanta.⁴ But Tāranātha emphatically says that one must not confound the Ārya or Sthavira Dharmatrāta with the Bhadanta, for the latter was really the compiler of the Udānavarga.⁵ Beal, however, points out that the compiler of the Dhammapada is all along spoken of in the Chinese versions as Ārya Dharmatrāta.⁶

It will be going far away from the historical truth to suppose that one and the same individual compiled all the three copies of the Dhammapada, the first of which differed so widely from the rest in some important respects. The attribution of the texts with 900 and 1000 verses to one individual might be justified on the ground that they are substantially the same.

But even the Udānavarga as a distinct copy must have been the work of an individual other than the compiler of the Sanskrit text with 900 verses. The two epithets, Sthavira and Bhadanta, applied to the name of Dharmatrāta, must, therefore, be taken to imply a real historical distinction in the individual and in time. But the question is whether these epithets refer to two individuals or to three. If Tāranātha's testimony is at all to be trusted, Bhadanta Dharmatrāta must be regarded as the compiler of the Udānavarga. Beal is inclined to think that Ārya Dharmatrāta, a contemporary of Vasumitra, was the compiler of the original of the Fa-kheu-king, recognised as a canonical work of the Vaibhāṣikas at the Council held under the presidency of Vasumitra during the reign of Kanishka.¹ He says, "It would not be surprising if we found that the edition of Dhammapada prepared by Dharmatrāta, belonged to the Vaibhāṣika school, whilst that known in Ceylon was compiled by the Sautrāntikas."

Beal is the first to suggest that the terms Sautrāntika and Vaibhāṣika represent two distinct stages of a Buddhist canon, but his mistake lies in identifying the Sautrāntika with the Sthaviravāda. The name Sautrāntika in its generic sense was derived evidently from that of the Suttavāda school or sect which was the sixth in descent from the Theravāda through a schismatic line : Theravāda > Mahimsāsaka > Sabbatthivāda > Dhammaguttika > Kassapiya > Saṃkantika > Sutta-vāda.² Even if the term Suttavāda or Sautrāntika be taken as a generic name for the Mahimsāsaka or the Sarvāstivāda canon in its final redaction or stage of development, it must always be kept carefully distinct from the Sthaviravāda on account of its schismatic associations. The contents and arrangement of a Sautrāntika work might eventually be found almost identical with those of a Sthaviravāda, and yet, if we are to respect at all the tradition in the Dipavaṃsa,³ there must remain a sharp distinction between the two works with regard to their languages. If in the case of a book of the Sthaviravāda canon we find that its language is what we now know as Pāli, then we must expect that the language of a corresponding Sautrāntika work will be something other than Pāli, say, Mixed Sanskrit. Granted this, we have got to answer which copy of the Dhammapada is technically a Sautrāntika work and which a Vaibhāṣika.

Beal seems to think that the Fa-kheu-king original with 500 verses was received into the Vaibhāṣika canon during the reign of Kanishka and that it was compiled by Ārya Dharmatrāta, the author of the Saṃyuktābhidharma Śāstra. His opinion is mainly based upon Hiuen Tshang's account of the Buddhist Council in Kaniska's time which is no less open to dispute. In the Chinese traveller's list of the Buddhist celebrities of Gandhāra¹ Dharmatrāta, the author of the Saṃyuktābhidharma Śāstra, is associated with Pārśva, Manoratha, Asaṅga, Vasubandhu and Nārāyaṇadeva, most of whom flourished in the 4th and 5th centuries A.D., while in another list of Vaibhāṣika teachers, quoted by Beal (supra), Dharmatrāta enjoys the company of Aśvaghoṣa and Vasumitra. If the tradition in the Chuh-yau-king deserves any credence, Dharmatrāta, the compiler of the Fa-kheu-king, was the maternal uncle of Vasumitra. According to Hiuen Tshang, Vasumitra, a native of Mid-India and a contemporary of Pārśva presided over the deliberations of the Vaibhāṣika Council which was convened in Kashmir under the auspices of king Kaniska² and he was the compiler of the Abhidharmaprakaraṇapāda Śāstra.³ How can we believe that one and the same Vasumitra was the compiler of the Abhidharma treatise and the president of the Vaibhāṣika Council in Kaniska's time? The three standard commentaries in Classical Sanskrit, compiled at the above council, presuppose an older redaction of the Sarvāstivāda canon consisting of three Piṭakas, viz., the Upadeśa or Sūtra, the Vinaya and the Abhidharma. Of the seven Prakaraṇas or treatises composing the Abhidharma Piṭaka, one⁴ is said to have been compiled 100 years and four⁵ 300 years after Buddha's demise. It is the four treatises attributed to Kātyāyana and Vasumitra that are placed by tradition in the Chinese three centuries after the demise of the Buddha. Prof. Takakusu finds reasons to think that Kātyāyana's Jñānaprasthāna Śāstra, which is the most important of seven Abhidharma treatises was composed in the 2nd century B.C. (i.e., four centuries after Buddha's demise) and that its language was a local Sanskrit dialect of Kashmir¹. We cannot but admit that there is a discrepancy of at least one century in the Chinese tradition which can as well be detected by the aid of Vasumitra's own work, the treatise on 'The Points of Controversy among the Buddhist Schools.' This important treatise, now translated in three European languages from the Tibetan² and the Chinese,³ goes to show that Vasumitra flourished at least four centuries after Buddha's demise. He was acquainted with the views of some of the schismatic schools and sects that sprang up during the 4th century B.E. These are the schools and sects which, according to the Chronicles of Ceylon, arose in post-Asokan times. The names of these schools, as also those of the Andhaka, the Āvantika, the Uttarāpathaka and the Vājirīya,⁴ are significant as pointing to a time when not only Buddhism was propagated outside the geographical limits of the Middle Country or 'Mid-India,' but so many influential local schools of thought were formed throughout India. King Asoka is justly credited with having sent Buddhist missions for the first time in history to various regions outside the Middle Country,⁵ and there must have elapsed some time before it was possible for so many local schools to come into being. From this it will appear quite reasonable to think that the closing date of the Abhidharma Piṭaka of the Sarvāstivāda or Sautrāntika canon was about a century after Asoka, i.e., the reigns of Puṣyamitra and Menander which might also be premised as a closing date of the entire Sarvāstivāda canon on the ground that in the Chinese version of one of the books of the Sūtra Piṭaka, viz., the Ekottarāgama or Aṅguttara Nikāya, there is mention of king Puṣyamitra. Rightly or wrongly, Puṣyamitra figures in the Sarvāstivāda literature, notably in the Divyāvadāna,¹ as a persecutor of the followers of Buddhism. The date of Puṣyamitra's accession to the throne of Magadha is, according to Vincent Smith, 184 B.C. The Chinese version of the Sarvāstivāda canon contains the translation of only four Āgamas which are in many respects the same as the first four Nikāyas of the Pāli Sutta Piṭaka. The Divyāvadāna, too, does not refer to more than four Āgamas.² Prof. Sylvain Lévi has, on the contrary, shown that there was a Kṣudraka Nikāya or Lesser Collection consisting of some books similar to the Pāli.³ That there were five Nikāyas and persons who got them by heart in the time of Puṣyamitra is conclusively proved by the votive inscriptions at Bharhut and Sanchi containing such personal epithets as Pañcanekayika, and Peṭaki.⁴ As regards the proof of a close resemblance between the Sarvāstivāda works of the Kṣudraka Nikāya and the Pāli, one can profitably compare the Fa-kheu-king original with the Pāli Dhammapada and see how much agreement there is between them. All this may suffice to show that the Fa-kheu-king original with 500 verses and written in Mixed Sanskrit belonged to an older redaction of the Sarvāstivāda canon, prepared probably during the reigns of Puṣyamitra and Menander. This is not to deny that a new redaction of the Sarvāstivāda canon was made during the reign of Kaniska along with the compilation of three Vibhāṣā Śāstras or extensive commentaries which subsequently gave rise to the name Vaibhāṣika replacing the older name Sautrāntika. The new redaction was no more than a later Sanskrit recast of the Sautrāntika canon in Mixed Sanskrit. But the difference between the two redactions was not merely that of language. The two redactions differed in manner as well as matter, so much so that the names of the texts of the Vaibhāṣika canon had to be changed in order to keep them distinct from their Sautrāntika originals. This fact is countenanced by the evidence of the original of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king which was but a Sanskrit copy of the Dhammapada with 900 verses and 33 chapters, compiled on the basis of the Fa-kheu-king original with 500 verses and 26 chapters and as M. Sylvain Lévi seems to think, its title was Udānavarga.¹ We cannot persuade ourselves to believe that Ārya Dharmatrāta who wrote the Saṃyuktābhidharma Śāstra was really the compiler of the original of the Fa-kheu-king for the simple reason that he was a native of Gandhāra, while the latter, described as maternal uncle of Vasuṃdita, was probably a native of the Middle Country. We are also tempted to think that the Sanskrit text with 900 verses was amplified, though slightly, in the Udānavarga by an individual—Bhadanta Dharmatrāta or whatever the name may be, who flourished about the time of Asaṅga and Vasubandhu, i.e., during the 4th or 5th century A.D. Thus we incline to regard the Buddhist Council in Kaniṣka's time as a landmark in the history of Sarvāstivāda Buddhism indicating a twofold transition: (1) that of the Sarvāstivāda literature from a Sautrāntika or Canonical stage to a Vaibhāṣika or Scholastic, and (2) that of the Sarvāstivāda canon from a Mixed Sanskrit redaction to one in Classical Sanskrit.

Beal is doubly wrong in regarding the Pāli Dhammapada as technically a Sautrāntika work and the original of the Fa-kheu-king as a Vaibhāṣika text, compiled during the reign of Kaniṣka. Our contention is that the latter work was technically a Sautrāntika text in Mixed Sanskrit, substantially the same as the Pāli. If its author Ārya Dharmatrāta was uncle to Vasuṃitra, its compilation must be referred to a date some four centuries after Buddha's demise, and this date is no other than the closing period of the Sautrāntika canon which is not earlier than the 2nd century B.C. The Fa-kheu-king was subsequently recast in Classical Sanskrit by the Vaibhāsikas during the reign of Kaniska and the text prepared was a Dhammapada with 300 verses, i.e., the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king original. The Udānavarga was but a second edition of the Vaibhāsika text—the Udānavarga of Kaniska's time, and its date does not seem to be later than the 5th century A. D. One must anxiously await the discovery of the stone receptacle containing the copper plates on which the Vaibhāsika canon and commentaries were engraved by the order of King Kaniska. Hiuen Tshang tells us that King Kaniska had built a stūpa over this stone receptacle.¹ After the examination of the traditions we feel convinced that the 2nd century B.C. was the closing date of the Sautrāntika canon. We have reasons even to believe that about this time the canon of each of the earlier schools was closed. It has been shown in our monograph on Asoka's Dhamma that a number of books were added to the Pāli canon in post-Asokan times, e.g., the Kathāvatthu, the Petavatthu, the Buddhavaṃsa, the Cariyā Piṭaka, the Apadāna and the Khuddakapāṭha. Vasumitra speaks of a second Mahādeva Council, convened, no doubt, during a post-Asokan period, on the lines of the Mahāsaṅghika.² Two Mahādevas are important personages in the history of Buddhism, one who is said to have been sent as a missionary to Mahisa-maṇḍala (Mysore) during the reign of King Asoka³ and another who was invited to Ceylon from the Pallava country in the time of King Duṭṭhagāmanī.⁴ There are two inscriptions on the railing of the Bharhut Stūpa recording the feats of miracle performed by a Mahādeva. It cannot, therefore, be doubted that there lived a great Buddhist leader, named Mahādeva, in about the 2nd century B.C., and if Vasu-mitra's account of the Mahādeva Council be true, we can equally believe that a redaction of the Mahāsaṅghika or Lokottaravāda Canon was prepared in Mixed Sanskrit and formally recognised at this council. If so, the compilation of the Mahāvastu Dhammapada can be referred to the date of this council.

As regards the Prakrit Dhammapada, one must look for its place of origin either in Khotan where its manuscript in the Kharoṣṭhī alphabet of the 2nd century A.D. was discovered among the ruins of Gośrūga or Gośirṣa Vihāra or in a North-Western region of India, round about Peshawar, where an Indo-Iranian dialect was current¹. So far as the tradition goes, the Buddhist missionaries cannot be supposed to have penetrated into these regions before the time of king Asoka. The Prakrit verses go to prove that they could not be read or intoned without waiving one's head, that, in other words, the manner of reading was akin to the Tibetan. If we can rightly suppose with Prof. Sten Konow that the place of find of its manuscript was the place of its origin, we must admit that its compilation in the local dialect of Khotan² was not possible much before the time of Kaniska. Rockhill has prepared an interesting account of Khotan on the basis of Hiuen Tshang's travels and the local annals, preserved in Tibetan translation.³ It goes to show that not long after the reign of Dharmāśoka Khotan became the settlement of a population, half Chinese and half Indian, whose habits resembled those of China and whose dialect was neither Indian nor Chinese, but a mixture of the two. Buddhism was first introduced from Kashmir into Khotan

¹ According to M. Jules Bloch the language of the Kharoṣṭhī Ms. was a dialect of the Western part of the Punjab or that of the North-Western Hills. His views are accepted by Lévi (J. A. xx. 1912, p. 214).

in the 5th year of the reign of king Vijayasambhava who ascended the throne 165 years after the establishment of the kingdom in 284 B.E.¹ It is during the reign of the eighth successor of this king that the doctrines of the Mahāsaṅghika school were brought into the country by the eldest son of the king who entered the Buddhist order under the name of Dharmānanda and went to India.² The doctrine of the Sarvāstivāda school of the Lesser Vehicle was introduced into the country by the venerable Mantrasiddhi³ who was called from India during the following reign. Thus Khotan became a meeting ground of the doctrines of two Buddhist schools shortly before the invasion of India by Vijayakirti, the 11th successor of Vijayasambhava and Kaniska, the king of Ku-zan. These traditions are important as showing how it became possible to compile a Dhammapada in Khotan as a synthesis of two older texts in Mixed Sanskrit, one belonging to the Mahāsaṅghika school and another to the sarvāstivāda or Saṅtrāntika. The probable date of its compilation must be referred to a time about five centuries after Buddha's demise, say, the 1st century B.C. or A.D. The result obtained is supported by the fact that the Prakrit Dhammapada differs from the Pāli and the original of the Fa-kuei-king by the inclusion of many verses from the Suttanipāṭa, the Mahābhārata and the Jātaka Book. Curiously enough, most of the verses from the latter source are to be found in the Jātakas illustrated by bas-reliefs at Bharhut. Here we Concluding Remarks.—The total result stated above can be further tested by a general history of the Tripitaka dealing particularly with the genesis and importance of the Dhammapada texts. This important subject has been separately dealt with in a supplementary section of this work. There it has been shown that M. Senart's inference as to the existence of a Dhammapada text older than the Pāli from a particular verse in Prakrit which, in his opinion, contains expressions better or more appropriate than those in the corresponding Pāli verse, is historically incorrect. The legitimate inference in such cases would be rather to say that that particular verse in Mixed Sanskrit or in some such language is older than its counterpart included in the Pāli Dhammapada. We need not be surprised to find that the Dhammapada or the Udānavarga is associated with the Jātakas and Avadanas or that the works of the Jātaka or Avadāna class came to be included in the Vinaya Pāṭika of a certain Buddhist school, such as the Mahāsaṅghika or the Sarvāstivāda, since from the very beginning, as the Mahāpadāna Suttanta of the Dīgha Nikāya goes to prove, these three classes of work were closely connected with one another. As a matter of fact, in this important discourse, called an Avadāna but classed as a Jātaka in the Cullavuddesa, two typical Dhammapada verses are intended to serve as model for the Pātimokkha par excellence (pātimokkha-uddesa). In going through this discourse one cannot but be struck by the fact that the Dhammapada as a type of literary composition, alike the Jātaka and Avadāna, grew up in the Buddhist literature by way of a protest against the orthodox code of morality—the Pātimokkha.

Among other important points, we have sought to show that the existing Pāli Tripiṭaka incorporates counterparts of several doctrines and treatises which had originated with other Buddhist schools and sects. It is not so much important in a discussion of the relative position of Pāli, Mixed Sanskrit, Prakrit and Sanskrit within the Ancient Buddhist literature of India to ascertain the dialect or dialects which the Buddha or his disciples generally used as the medium of instruction as to determine the language in which the original materials of the Buddhist canon were prepared during the life-time of the Buddha. We have specified throughout Part II of this work that Dhammapada verses lead us ultimately back to a number of prose discourses in the Dīgha or in the Majjhima Nikāya, constituted of some stock passages or highly crystallised exegetical fragments, which, as their names, Vibhaṅga, Niddesa and Khandha imply, appear as so many solid pieces of brick or blocks of stone with which the first fabric of the canon was constructed. Those who have ever cared to be acquainted with the language and phraseology of these fragments will always shrug their shoulders at the slightest suggestion that Pāli was derived from a Pālībhaṣa or popular dialect locally current in Magadha or in the Middle Country. The progress of researches into linguistic developments within Buddhist literature has been much hampered in this country by a thoughtless and most absurd speculation about what we now call and know as Pāli language on the basis of the identity of the name Pāli with the word Pallī meaning a village. This school of philologists, quite innocent of the literary history of India, always appear to err on the wrong side. The word Pāli has never been used in the Ceylonese Chronicles and Buddhaghosa's commentaries in a sense other than the canon as distinguished from the commentaries. The significance of the name Pāli or Pālī as denoting the text is that the canon consists of the discourses of the Buddha and those of his disciples, characterised by a connected sequence of thought, (pariyāyena bhāsitaṃ, dhammapariyāyaṃ) having a good beginning, a good middle and a good end. The primary meaning of Pallī, Paṅkti, Pāṇṭi or Pāṭi is no doubt the same. Taken in this sense, Pallī denotes a group of houses arranged according to a plan. The Bengali word 'Paṅkti' denotes a well-arranged row of seats and 'Pāṇṭi' denotes a well-reasoned opinion in a matter of dispute by a body of experts well-versed in the Sāstras. Thus if there is any Bengali word which can be philologically connected with Pāli or Pālī, it is pāṇṭi in the sense of a well reasoned view, expressed in words.

There is no reason to dispute the tradition, recorded in the Dīpavaṃsa, that the literary language of the Buddhist Order until the breaking out of the first schism about a century after Buddha's demise and the formation of the Mahāsaṃghika School was the same or uniform and that the history of the schisms is bound up with a violent tampering with the language and arrangement of the texts. The schismatic developments in language and literature followed two lines deviating from the Sthaviravāda and three recensions of the canon were closed, in about the 2nd Century B.C.—the Sthaviravāda canon in a language which is now commonly known as Pāli and the Sautrāntika and Mahāsaṃghika recensions in two types of Mixed

Sanskrit. The Sthaviravāda line has continued in Ceylon, Burma and Siam until to-day, while the Sautrāntika and Mahāsaṅghika lines culminated in Classical Sanskrit. The various recensions of Asoka's Rock and Pillar edicts, distributed over a vast geographical area, from Gandhāra to Kalinga and from Nepal to Mysore, appear in history as so many indelible records of a reaction against the standardisation of 'Buddhist scriptural languages. The repeated attempts of the Buddhist emperor to adapt the language of each edict to local dialects were fruitful in more than one way. These suggested a possibility of translating the Buddhist Canonical texts into local dialects, outside the Middle Country and it was really left to his missionaries to accomplish the task. The compilation of a Dhammapada text, such as the Prakrit, in a local dialect of Khotan or in that of the countries round Peshawar, broadly the Gandhāra region, may be singled out as the first visible fruit of the reaction implied in Asokan edicts. Since Asoka the Buddhist missionaries penetrated into dark regions within and outside India with the torch-light of the truths of Buddhism. It is these missionaries and their successors and disciples who translated the sacred texts into several local dialects and thus raised those dialects to the status of literary languages and laid the foundation of many national literatures, characters, languages, arts and civilisations. The history of the subsequent Buddhist literature goes to show that the development of Prakrit became an undercurrent to manifest itself again in about the 10th Century A.D. in the songs and treatises of Sahajiyā and other schools of Buddhist Tāntrika. The history of the Dhammapada literature covers some twelve centuries, from the 4th century B.C. to the 9th century A.D. The Dhammapada texts have an international importance, for it is through them that the lofty messages of Buddhism could be appealed to the various nations of Asia who were con-imaginative and by far the less speculative, although in some respects more practical, than the Hindus or Aryanised peoples of India. They are no less important for the fact that they afford us a clue for understanding the process of the origin and growth of poetry as well as of Niti literature in India and other countries where Buddhism has spread.

Apramadaviha is, I suppose, the remnant of apramadaviharino, which we again find, for instance, in Itivut., ed. Windisch, p. 74, l. 25, equally in the genitive. Pratasuhino must be in the same way a genitive singular = prāptasukkhināḥ. It is clear that the two words might also be some nominative forms in the plural.

^a Pramodia Pāli paṃodaya, with the y dropped (cf. asraṇu l. 4 seves, A² 2, etc.), and with the change

- b. This reading appears to me to be in every way better than that of the Pāli Dhammapada. Sambhrama is better than saṁstava, but especially gami is so obviously preferable to kāma (for the Prākṛit text the hypothesis of a gross mistake is done away with by the absence of mā in the first pāda) that I can only doubt if the Pāli reading is not the result of a mistake. Probably this is an old error, and it may be thought that the Pāli redaction is based upon some version expressed in a Prākṛit, analogous to that of the present text, where the substitution of the tenuis for the sonant (cf. adhikachati, etc.) was frequent.
- c. Above the letter read ja remains some trace of a horizontal stroke, which, according to an observation of M. d'Oldenburg, marks the aspiration of j in our manuscript.
- d. One might be inclined to read viṣeṣam; but the lower part of the spear in ṣ or in analogous characters is so often twisted in the cases which exclude the interpretation m (cf. gami of the following line, the ṣ of ṣanaka, A⁴, 6, etc.), and the probable notation of the anusvāra is so rare in our manuscript (I do not know of any sure instance of it in our fragments of Paris) that I do not hesitate to transcribe as I have done.

Cf. the Dhammapada verse referred to in the preceding line.

- a. This time the sign of the aspirate is wanting above the j, as often elsewhere. But this curious peculiarity will be brought home to us by a paleographic examination.
- b. The Sanskrit will be kṣayaṁ duḥkṣaya prāpnuyāt. Pramuni = Pāli pāpune. In lines 6 and 7 we shall meet successively with amoti for āpnoti, and pranoti for prāpnoti. The nasalisation of p into m does not appear solely due to any memory of the compound pn surviving its disjunction into pun, for B, 24 has mano = punah, Pāli pana.

^c Cf. Dhammap., 315.

- ^a No doubt it is almost restored : apramadarata as in the next verse. Bhodha for bhotha, as generally in this manuscript.
- ^b Yu=raḥ. In A², 7 we shall find bhadraṣu=bhadraṣu yu=Sk. bhadraṣu vaḥ. Accordingly it should be written vo instead of ve (= va) in the text of the Dhammapada. We shall again come across uvacai=apaccayā in B, 3; uvacai, that is to say, uvacaya, ya being frequently written i; cf. ll. 6, 7 na=nāyaṁ; prahai=prahāya, A², 6 (A², 7?), etc. The g is sometimes totally dropped between two vowels: roa=raga (C^{vo}, 3), and may, with stronger reason, weaken into y.
- ^c Samapi is, of course, to be completed into sumapita.

- 5 apramadarata bhodha sadhami supravedita
drugha udhvaradha^a atmana pagasana va kuṇ^b ..

Cf. Dhammap., 327.

- ^a All the analogies demand the reading udhvaradha for uddharadha. We shall find elsewhere utvari for uttari (B, 37). As, in the two cases, the compound commences with an initial u, one may think that it is this nearness which accounts for this strange orthography, and that, in reality, it corresponds to a pronunciation rudharadha, rutam, the v having been transposed in writing in the Prākṛit text, like the r of drugha.
- ^b In spite of partial mutilation, the last letter is certain; it is kuṇ[ara] that ought to be read, or, what recurs in the same way kuṇa which we shall presently find again in A² 4

6 nai kalu^a pramadasa aprati^b asavachaye pramata duhu amoti^c siha ba muyamatia^d ○

- a. This, as I have just pointed out, should be understood in Sanskrit as nāgaśāṅ kālāḥ.
- b. Aprāpte. Cf. Dhammap., verses 253, 272.
- c. For amoti, cf. v. 3 above. The usual omission of the anusvāra does not permit us to decide if we are in the presence of the singular or the plural, if pramata = pramattāḥ or pramattāḥ, and siha = siṃhah or siṃhāḥ. I, however, adhere to the first solution on account of the next verse where the singular is assured and on account of the comparison, which, to all appearance, stands on the sense "a certain lion." The termination o is often represented by a. In l. 5, we have pagasana ra kuñ[aro]. The reading mo cannot be doubtful, although the vowel appears to have been written in an exceptional way. We had dukha in l. 3, but the spelling duka is much more in use.
- d. A comparison with Cr^o, 2 will prove that it is right, as I believe, to read ma. It must be admitted, however, that m presents a form which is scarcely ordinary. It is true that if it is read kha—another interpretation easily suggesting itself, the form of the kh will not be any more regular, the bend of the ring towards the right being generally much more prominent. If ba is taken = ra, ira, as elsewhere (e.g., A², 4), the two expressions kṣayamatia or muyamatia, both possible in Kharoṣṭhi writing, remain equally obscure to me, perhaps because I do not know or remember any story to which there might be an allusion here. According to the first hypothesis we should have kṣayamatyā, according to the second, I think, muyamatyā. In the second case, one might imagine, for instance, a story where the lion killed himself by his negligence, in fancying to have to deal with a gazelle instead of some formidable enemy. In the absence of a parallel verse, which I have not hitherto been able to discover, I can only leave all conclusions suspended. The rest of the strophe is easily rendered: "One should not relax until one should have destroyed the passions in oneself."

I cannot make anything useful out of the three small fragments that figure on the left of the Plate and do not seem to tally with any part of the principal fragment. The one in the middle gives some sure characters :

where cīṭhatu may be = tiṣṭhantāḥ.

A²

- 1 . . madenamakabhā devanasamidh(i)gat .

Not remembering any parallel passage either in the Dhammapada or elsewhere, I do not see I have, for the present, anything really useful to say on this fragment. The very mutilation of the words is doubtful. I should only like to remark that the letters t and d are so very similar that one can never be positive over the transcription of the one or the other, as long as the sense of the context is wanting there to guide the reading. The vocalization of the dh of samidhi is only likely. Kabhā may very well represent garbhā. I should only like to dwell upon the reading of the last character. It is usually read ph (cf. Bühler), and I myself have read it so in the name Gudupharasa in the inscription of Takhti Bahi (Notes in Epigr. Ind., III). But it is, I believe, a transcription that requires to be revised. It is not the normal form of ph, nor its slight variant which is used in this manuscript, e.g., in the word phatana (C^{vo}. 8) and elsewhere. Is it a double ph or a double h? Besides the present passage where the interpretation of the sign remains doubtful, it reappears in abhai (B, 7), in salobhu (B, 20, 21), in sebbu=serayati (C^{vo}, 7, 18, 21) and in prabhavāṇa (C^{vo}, 3, 16, 17); in all these words it is hh that we expect, more particularly in sebbu which we also find clearly written as sehu, where a hardening into ph would be quite odd. I have to add that in one case at least, viz. B, 21, we find the hh of apalabho written in a character different from that which is in question and in which the hh of salobhu is written side by side. To speak without being positive, the orthography, so inconsistent in this manuscript, seems to indicate that our dialect generally preserved the hh. A sure solution would be possible only after all the monuments, where appears the character in question, will have been verified from this point of view. Meanwhile, I have decided to read it everywhere as hh and not ph. I have transcribed in conformity with this conclusion, but I have not failed to note, in every special case, the sign represented in the transcription.

Cf. Dhammap., 167.

- a. The comparison with Dh. 167 enables us to complete [hi]na and, probably, sev[e]a.
- b. For rocayati equivalent to serayati, cf. Dhammap., p. 122, l. 15: kassa traṇṇ dhammaṇ rocessi "whose law dost thou approve, dost thou follow?" We had ṣoyati for ṣorati (A¹, 4). It is likely that the manuscript had roya.
- c. Childers (q. v.) declared that he had not any idea of the precise meaning of lokavāḍhana. M. Fausboll transcribed the etymological signification: "mundi amplificator", and the rendering of M. Max Müller "a friend of the world", is quite vague. I suspect that the term rests upon the expression kula- or vaṃsa-vāḍhana, and that our verse counsels not to increase the number of beings, that is to say, to renounce desire, on the one hand, and to attain to the perfection that closes the circle of samsāra, on the other.

puvi pramajati^a pacha su na pramajati
loku ohaseti abha muto va suriu^b ○

Cf. Dhammap., 172.

There is no doubt as to the reading lu. The ca of Dhammapada has, as often, an opposite meaning, entirely equivalent. The fold of the bark has rendered the reading of the last two letters very indistinct; it seems certain that the final t is accompanied by an i; what is on the top of j is, on the contrary, very doubtful; I have accordingly decided to transcribe pramajati. On the whole, this reading affords a construction equivalent in meaning to pamajjitvā of the Dhammapada, but more correct; for it does not leave the relative yo alone and without a finite verb. Meanwhile, the right reading might well be pramajiti or pramajeti = pramajitra; not that the form is justified without difficulty, for it would be necessary to allow a spelling ti for trā which ill becomes analogy, but that it seems that in line 8, paricajeti may likewise be = paricajitra.

We have several times already met with i for e in the middle of words. Although imam may be more natural, etam has nothing surprising; the substitution of obhāseti for pubhāseti, and of the sun for the moon does not require any observation.

Cf. Theragāthā, verses 256, 1117.

Cf. Divyāvadāna., pp. 68, 138.

Cf. Burnouf, Lotus, pp. 529-530.

The incorrect spelling śāsana is invariably reproduced in this manuscript.

The second and third letters of nalagara are indistinct. The parallel passages alone permit of a restoration of the word, and the traces of the letter which I restore as = la, seem to me less favourable for a reading da, which, in itself, would be equally plausible. I have already pointed out the spelling ba for va — iva (A¹ 6)

- 5 apramata smatimata suṣila bhotu bhichavi
susamahitasagapa sacita anurachadha ○

Cf. Dhammap., 327.

- a. The vocative bhichave in B. 53 (cf. Pāh, bhikkhave) appears to support here the form bhichavi. But though the construction is differently modified in either hemistich, I do not find any means to make out anything of bhichavi else than a nominative; unless the fault of the copyist be admitted, bhotu (= bhontu) cannot be interpreted as a second person: "Let the bhikkhus be intent, conscientious, virtuous. The mind well-collected, guard your thought."

- 6 yo ima sadhamavinau^a apramatu vihaṣitī^b prahai jatisansara^c dukhusata^d karisa[t]ji.

Cf. Divya Avad., p. 68.

Thus verse in the Div. Avad. comes immediately after our verse 4 above.

- a. Vinau=vinā[y]am fits well. But there seems to be, before ri, a trace of the remnant of another letter. Besides that it gives a syllable too many for the pāda, I scarcely imagine what it could be. Viharati is construed with the accusative, probably on the analogy of carati.
- b. Vihaṣitī=rihaviṣyati, with syncope of ri (i?), and i=ya, as in prahai=prahāya, and frequently. Similarly rihaṣasi, B. 19.
- c. I do not see how the compound which I read riṣa can be interpreted otherwise. It is not difficult to find out the s there; as regards the ri, we have not, I believe, any instance of it in the inscriptions; it is, then, not easy to state precisely the analysis of the constituent elements. The value of the sign is attested by several instances.
- d. The n of kku is perfectly clear; I can only see here a mistake of the scribe which is explained by the n of the preceding syllable t is of course t kkaṭ vadami bhadrañu^a yavatetha samakata^b nadarata bhodha sadhami supravediti^c ○

Cf. Dhammap., 337.

We have already met with yu=vo, vah (A¹, 4), and bhadrañu is again=bhadrañ yu=bhadrañ vah. We see that the reading in the Pāli text should not be avadāmi=vyavaradāmi, but separated into two words. The two *vah*s are not a double use; bhadrañ does not qualify tañ: bhadrañ vah is, in some sort, the plural of bhadrañ te, bhadante, and forms an independent expression. It is a different question, which I do not pretend to decide, namely, whether it is convenient to attribute to it all its etymological value or to consider it as a mode of address, and whether to render either simply "Lords !" or "welfare to you !"

For samakata, cf. adhikachati (A¹, 2, etc.).

Cf. Dhammap., 78 : ariyapparedite dhamme . . . For supravediti compare, more particularly, one of the frequent epithets of the Dharma : srākkhyāta.

ada parivajeti^a apramadarata sada etha kuśala dhama yokachemasa prataa^b ○

I have, in line 3, already suggested that parivajeti might be=parivajetra. The t and the i are clear; we cannot, then, look for the second person plural here, which would be expected side by side with bhāvētha.

This expression is met with, for instance, in the Suttanipāta, 425 : Yogakkhemassa pattiyā ; "Estranged from all relaxation, true to a constant application, practise virtue to attain to Nirvāṇa."

Here is the transcription of what remains visible of the two verse-ends, that figure on the fragment reproduced up on the left of Plate A² :

loke athatha dhiraveneā dīcha.^a ○ lana sabrayano pratismato^b ○

It does not seem, as one would expect here, that the last letter is ti which would give dīchat, and supposing the separation of the words to be precise, it would permit of a transcription in Sanskrit: *loke 'itthūrttham dhīro raineyo ditsati. But we are simply hypothesizing. The surest course is to wait till a parallel Pāli text is found.

- b. That is to say, samprajānah pratisimptah. The two epithets are likewise contiguous in Suttañipāta, v. 413 (425?). Our dialect tends particularly to weaken the tennues that follow the nasal: we have had sa(n)gapa = saṅkalpa (l. 5 above); we shall have (B, 35) sija = siṅha, and (C^{ro}, 16) annabisa = annakumpi[syā]nah, etc: similarly sahcayana; cf. (C^{ro}, 43).

- 1 savi saghara anica ti yada prañaya pasati
tada nivinati^a dukh

Of the two small fragments that follow, the first one applies well to this verse; there are to be found traces of the following: eso magu vi[śodhita]; the second surely belongs to another passage, since the verse ends with visodhita.

Of. Dhammap., 277.

- a. One of the peculiarities attaching to the dialect of this manuscript is that the compound nd, dental or cerebral, is written n, that is to say, if its appearance as it is written is to be believed, is changed into nn: panita for paṇḍita, etc. Nibbindati dukkhe, as Childers has rightly understood it: "Only does he conceive disgust for [existence which is nothing but] pain."

- 2 savi saghara dukha ti vada prañao gradhati
tada nivinati dukha^b eso magu visodhita ○

Gradhati=granthati, in keeping with the observation just made on the A² fragment of the principal Plate I understand the word here in the sense of "to deduce, to reason, to conclude."

Our manuscript gives, here and in the next verse, dukha, that is to say, dukham, the accusative as opposed to the locative of the Pâli. It is, very likely, the same in the preceding verse. This construction is, however, difficult to explain.

Visodhi for visudhi is not surprising in this manuscript where the u and the o are constantly used, the one for the other. As regards the final letter, it is not impossible that it may be e instead of a, but there is no more certainty, the less so, as the next verse clearly has visodhia.

dhama anatma ti yada paśati cakhuma^a nivinati dukha eṣo mago viśodhia ○

Cf. Dhammap., 279.

Above the letter chu appear traces of a sign, which is hardly distinct. I can only explain it as a kh, some reader having felt the necessity to note that, for chu, khu could also be written; in fact, the compound ks is changed equally into ch and kh in this manuscript. And the conjecture is so much the more plausible, as, just in the verse following, the word is written cakhuma. If it is verified, it will have this interesting character that this superadded kh, written, consequently, after the original execution of the manuscript, displays a form more archaic than what figures there ordinarily.

Cf. Dhammapada, 273.

Citvāri, cultūri is in the Buddhist dialects readily used for the masculine. I do not believe that our cari may be the direct reflex of culvāri, but it may be rather of catara; the change of o into i may strictly be mechanical. Meanwhile, it is difficult to imagine that the analogy of the use of cullāri should not have floated in the mind of those using cari, and influenced this spelling, just as the memory of a Māgadhism bhickare has similarly aided the orthography bhickare, bhickari (cf. A², 5). As regards the elision of the t, see l. 10, phaṣai side by side with bhaṣati, etc.

6 utiṭha^a na pramajea dhamu sucarita cari

Cf. Dhammap., 168.

- a. The omission of the final t, utiṭha for utittha, may only be due to the negligence of the scribe, not to any dialectic peculiarity.
- b. The traces of the final u of suha are not quite distinct; it is perhaps saha which the copyist wished to write. Seati appears to rest, not on the usual form seti, but on the form ṣapātī, apa being written e.
- c. This last pāda is found again likewise in C¹⁰, 21, with the genitive parasa for the locative parasmim. Similarly, numarurasa, B, 30, sagaracūṣa, C¹⁰, 3. A mistake, simply clerical (parasa for parasi = parasmim) is hardly probable side by side with asmi loki. It is more natural to admit a perversion, a confusion in the use of cases, of which the following (l. 9, fg) will supply many instances, and of which the language of the Mahāvastu affords us so many evidences. For cu we find in this manuscript a regular scale of clerical modifications: ja, C¹⁰, 17; ji, B, 35; ya, A¹, 4; yi, here and elsewhere; i, C¹⁰, 37; i for ya is explained well, and the orthography yi may be strictly understood as equivalent to ya; but in ji, for ja, it is difficult not to admit an abnormal action of the analogy of i-yi.

Cf. Dhammap., 25.

- a. The weakening of the medial p (and also initial) into r, is most frequent in this manuscript.
- b. The comparison which this variant of the last pāda involves with that of the Pāli recension, is in itself certainly less satisfactory. For an island, age is a factor of destruction less menacing than the surge (flood) to which it is a prey. I wonder why it should not be understood as jharā, and why, on the analogy of jharī meaning "river" (PWB q.v.), the word could not be taken, not in the precise acceptation of "cascade, waterfall," but in a generic sense bordering upon that of ogha. Cf. the Kharoṣṭhī inscription where Bühler thinks he is able to read jharanī and interpret it in the sense of "well." Whatever that may be, the substitution of the verb abhimardati is probably inspired by the desire to do away with the metrical inaccuracy of abhiṭṭirati.

Cf. Dhammap., 280.

- a. The manuscript has clearly uṭhane, which would not permit of any other division of words. It is certain that we have here before us a confusion of the scribe and that the original reading was uthanaatasa, that is to say, uthanukulasmī. Compare note c to l. 6, where I have cited aguraudasa= saṃkūrakūte. I do not see how it can be read otherwise than as anuthathate; yet it must be admitted that the tha has a somewhat unusual form, which, the context permitting, might be read the.

b. Yoi=yo agāṇe. This reading is assuredly preferable to gurū of the Pāli—little matters youth, since moral force, and not physical activity, is only concerned—which must be due to a confusion of the redactors. There is another confusion lurking,
I believe, in ālasiyā or ālasiyaṃ (cf. Fausbøll's notes), neither of which can be well construed with upeta. In a dialect where the spelling—and perhaps the pronunciation—e could be substituted for ya, as is the case with the language of our manuscript, the compound ālasiyupeta=ālasiyaupeta would save the metre; the Pāli redactors have sought to restore it by an arbitrary expedient.

c. Smātima can only be explained as=asmātima, the negative a being dropped after the final a which precedes. It is, if I am not mistaken, the only instance of sandhi our fragments afford.

- a.* O for u is in this manuscript particularly common after h, cf. for instance, bahojano, C^{no}, 31 (30 ?); C^{no} (C^{no} ?), 12, etc. But we have already pointed out some parallel cases, after other consonants.
b. Bi=(a)pi is met with elsewhere, as in C^{no}, 9. The spelling ṣ for śr is by far the most common in this manuscript.

..... The reading phaṣai is certain. The Pāli has passati, that is to say, paśyati. Ṣ might here be interpreted in the same way as s (=ś) in phuṣamu (B, 25) from sprś, and, as I find that in the verse of the St. Petersburg manuscript which corresponds to Dhammapada 398, phalia is = paḷigha, we might strictly bring back our phaṣai to paśyati. But a double anomaly must have to be admitted in the word itself and immediately beside its exact spelling. I prefer by far to hold that ph is for bh and phaṣai = bhāṣati. I have myself sought to discard a whole series of apparent instances of this transformation (cf. A², 1). That it is not produced from sporadic cases, is no reason, especially as the hardening of the sonant into tenues is more frequent in our text. The very resemblance which is manifest here between the letters bh and ph, might have caused an accidental mistake. With bhāṣati the sense is excellent: "it does not suffice to make fine speeches, he must speak by his acts (kāyena, in keeping with the classification of kāya-, vāk- and manalikarma)", or, if you like, "to teach by example." At the most we may question if bhaṣai = bhāṣati, as abhai = ābhāti (B, 7), or = bhāṣaye, bhāṣayet. Anyhow it is curious to think that such a substitution of ph for bh in the version which has served as the basis of the Pāli redaction, has been quite the cause of the confusion that has introduced passati in the text, and quite naturally, misled the interpreters.

Ho = kho, khalu, as in C^{ro}, 6.

The singular mutu, mṛtaḥ, may strictly be understood as "those who live in relaxation are as a dead man", but it is very probable that our scribe has made a slip and that the original text read muta: "they are as those dead," that is to say, sure to die, so as not to escape transmigration

- b. Apramadaśa for the locative; cf. parasa in l. 6 above. I had at first read pañiti=pañilito, but I do not think that we are here forced to admit this sort of Māghadism. The vowel stroke is not lengthened upwards, and, if it crosses the transverse bar of the letter i, it is, I think, only a simplification due to cursive writing, which has united, in the form of a ring, the top of the vowel stroke and the left hook of the consonant. It is certain, at all events, that the phrase is here construed in the singular and not in the plural as in Pāli.

Cf. Dhammap., 26.

- a. Drameddhi, just as we have had already drugha. Other analogous instances will be found afterwards.
- b. The reading sethi appears to me decidedly better than the Pāli setthavā, which gives here but a vague and colourless epithet. Sethi is the nominative of śeṣṭhin, and the half-verse should be rendered: "But the wise clings to diligence as a banker to his treasures." Although the vowel stroke does not descend below the lower transverse bar of tha, several instances prove that it is i and not e that should be read. I am content with referring to diṭṭhi, A⁴, 2. It is quite the reading sethi or śreṣṭhi which, in his text, the Tibetan translator of the Udānavarga had before his eyes, as is shown by the version of M. Stockhill (Udānavarga, IV, 18): "the wise man must be careful, as is the head of a caravan watching his treasures."¹

It is true that in verses A¹, 4 fg., we find b completely suppressed between two vowels : supraudhu, etc. In the same way, the compound śv, reduced here into ś, is in several cases preserved in the form of śp : viśpa, B, 26 ; viśpaśa, B, 25.

Cf. Dhammap., 28.

The y is sometimes more square, sometimes more angular at the top ; materially, it will be perfectly lawful to read aruśa ; but it is allowable also to read aruyu, and this is the only transcription which appears to me to give an intelligible form. We want, in fact, an equivalent for āruhya. Yu=hya is peculiar. I must say that it is specially the u that astonishes me. As regards the consonant, there are several instances which reveal a particular affinity, in the language of this manuscript, between h and j, which is readily written y [cf. sabrayana (A² fragment) etc.] ; in B, 34 we find daj(h)amana for dahyamāna, and in the St. Petersburg fragments I have found y(i)samano=himsamānaḥ, and parvahita = prarajita. We may also compare these instances with śchu, C^{ro}, 8, ścho C^{ro}, 9, etc. (śreyah), where y is represented by h. As for the vocalisation in u, if I cannot explain it, I am at least in a position to cite another instance of it, altogether similar : abhiruyu = abhibhūya (B, 30, 31). In both cases, the vowel in the preceding syllable is u. It seems then that it may be this nearness, which, by somewhat of an effect of vowel harmony, may have coloured our u.

- b. Must we explain the first i of arechati for arechati similarly, or just take it to be a simple slip of the copyist having been influenced by the i of the following syllable?

17 apra tu

1 .juo namo" so magu abhaya namu sa diśa radho akuyano" namu dhamatrakehi sahato" ○

Cf. Saṃy. Nik., I, V, § 6, v. 2.

- a. This verse is closely bound up with the two following, and completes with them a sort of allegory founded on the imagery which likens Buddhist teaching to a "vehicle", yāna. The restoration must be . ṇju(k)o. The reading of the vowel in the syllable mo of namo is not fully certain; it is so much the more probable that in the next pādas we have, of a surety, namo. We will find plenty of other cases where m labialises a following vowel into u.
- b. Our akuyano confirms the reading akujano adopted for the Pāli by the editor, M. Feer. To me the explanation appears to be a-kujana, "where the wicked are none."
- c. Saṃhata is as good as saṃyutta of the Pāli. The word that precedes is perhaps more doubtful. Fortunately the Pāli text continues the comparison: "so w c i serves as the theme to these v r c it does of the "wheels of the Law." But here our reading can only be dhamatrakehi or dhamadrakehi. The second form gives us nothing intelligible; on the contrary, the first may be interpreted as "dharmatarkaiḥ, that is to say, "the reasonings, the thoughts of the Law." The Suttanipāta, 1101 rightly speaks of aññāvimoḥḥarū, which is dharmatarkapurejara; the dhammatarkas are thus likewise represented as affording a quick impulse to religious progress. We are going to have, in the next verse, the expression samedithipurejara, which, on the other hand, has its counterpart in the Suttanipāta, and the first two terms clear up each other: samyagdṛṣṭi denotes "true, just ideas", dharmatarka, in the same way, "the reasonings, the ideas conformable to religion", consequently just and right. It is probable that the reading tarka is older than the reading cakra, which, being more ingenious and piquant, could, once established, no more have been displaced. I translate therefore. "The path is the straight road, the country, the region of felicity, the chariot, the resort of honest people firmly established in truth."

For this verse and particularly for the meaning of apālamba, cf. Morris, Journ. Pali T. Soc., 1886, p. 128. The form avarama is, I believe, the only example, found in our fragments, of the substitution of r for l; as for m=mb, we may compare udumaresu = udumbaresu in B, 40.

Smati sa = smati asa. It seems to me that parivāraṇa ought to denote rather a part of the car than, as M. Morris would have it, the escort which accompanies it; this is perhaps the roof which covers and protects it.

Although the character read 'hu' appears cut off by the transverse stroke of i, I doubt, as it seems to bear well the sign u at the foot, if this stroke, at all events shorter and less prominent than ordinarily, should be taken into account and I am of opinion that it is dhamanu that should be read, that is to say, dhamun aham, as in Pāli.

- d. Samyā is, in this manuscript, always written same = samya. For the expression, compare note (c) of the foregoing verse. This verse is rendered : "Modesty is its skid ; consciousness, the roof which protects it ; and I call the Law, the driver that impels and quickens the truth."

I venture only to affirm that the scribe may not have meant to write gihī, for the bar (i.e., the vowel stroke) passes slightly down the ring of the letter ga. This detail is of so little importance that the confusion between i and e is here complete, as can also be seen from vi=vai, ve and etina. The inversion parva^o for parra^o is not rare ; I have several times noted parvāhila in the St. Petersburg fragments, where we moreover find the j replaced by an k, which perhaps has no other rôle than to prevent hiatus, like the y of the Ardhamāgadhi orthography. I translate : "Whoever possesses such a car, layman or monk, proceeds to Nirvāṇa in that car."

In the Pāli, however, it has no place either in the one or in the other word; it is anavasthita and anavassuta which the sense requires and which are in the Pāli version. The scribe has, perhaps, been drawn into this blunder by the thought of anuvāṭhita = anupasthita, which floated in his mind.

The top of this leaf exactly fits in with the end of one of the leaves of the manuscript, which have found their way to St. Petersburg; so that our first sixteen lines meet with their complement there, partially at least. I have thought not to exceed the reserve, imposed upon me by the very courtesy with which my learned colleague and friend M. d'Oldenburg placed his documents at my disposal, by adding any copy of the verse-pieces which have been joined to our own fragments; both of them form an inseparable whole. I have taken care to enclose within brackets what are thus borrowed from the St. Petersburg fragment.

Cf. Dhammap., 419.

- a. It is not possible to distinguish a priori the t from the d in our manuscript. We might as well read vedi. Yet the present appears to me here much more probable than the past, and I should be more disposed to admit that the reading of the Dhammapada proceeds from some old confusion, based, perhaps, exactly on the similarity of those two characters. Of the letter which I have replaced by a sign of interrogation, the bottom of the stroke only remains. It has no significant hook permitting of reading it as u in order to represent uravati, the upapatti of the Pāli. At all events, I believe that the last letter, though the vowel-stroke may be a little clipped, bears well the notation of r.
- b. M. d'Oldenburg transcribes the beginning of his fragment as [sa]rraśana. In the facsimile, there is nothing but the end, of which the reading śana is surely possible, but not certain, so much the less because it is difficult to see how this form sarraśana would be related to the forms sarraśah, sarraśo which the Pāli permits us to expect. On the other hand, with this reading, h syllable is wanting for the metre, and the facsimile, to a certainty, permits us to think that a small piece of the leaf is dropped between the end of our fragment and the commencement of the other. The exact reading of this pâda-end remains, therefore, necessarily doubtful until further settled.

2. With this pâda we may compare Dhammap., v. 261 :
sa ve vuntamalo dhīro thero ti (thanīro ti) pavuccati
 I translate: "The man without anger, without despondency, released from all future birth (= antimaśarīraṃ of the preceding verse), wise, stainless, and firm, it is that man whom I call [truly] a brāhman."

1. Let it suffice to note in passing the Māghadhisms puñe and pure i.e., pāpe, for puññaṃ and pāpaṃ.

2. We should note the letter hu, uhu = uho, uhau [h = bh, as often; cf. ohaseti (A², 3), etc.]; the interpretation cannot be contested. It is decisive for the transcription of uhu = uho, aham, which recurs so often in our St. Petersburg fragments. Şaga, here as well as in the following pâda, presents a double peculiarity: ş for s, and the particular form of y. One might be tempted to interpret this form as = gh aspirated; but, besides that the aspirate would not be justified here, we have already (A⁴, 6, note) met with an instance of a variant equivalent to the letter, with a stroke above, expressing aspiration. It is then much more natural to explain this base of the character as an accidental stroke of a habitual writing, which is very much generalised in certain numismatic alphabets. As regards uvacai = upaccayā, I refer to A¹, 4.

- b. Akatagati, that is to say, agatāgati, "who is not drawn into the four agatis", for which cf. Childers. A graceful scribbling without any special signification will here be noticed, whereby the scribe has finished off the spear of ga, and which he has reproduced in the lower part of the vowel-stroke of mi in the last pāda.
- c. The reading pru seems certain. For my part, I cannot account for the r, and until a better interpretation should be found. I propose to understand pruju devamanuṣāna=pūjyān devamanuṣyān. The expression devamanuṣyapūjita is, with its various equivalents, current in Buddhist phraseology. The change of manuṣya into manuṣa is, as will be seen later on, constant in our manuscript. I translate: "The man who applies himself to meditation, heroic and wise, who is a vanquisher [of passions], who does not force himself into evil ways, and who is worthy of the respect of gods and men, it is that man whom I call [truly] a brāhman."

- b. This pāda appears here to be quite out of place, inferior certainly to its Pāli counterpart: budhu is twice repeated, figuring already in the first pāda, and daśabaluveta is an epithet that only suits the "Buddha" in the technical sense, which cannot be aimed at here. "The man who applies himself to meditation, heroic, wise, true to his duty, and free from passions, the Buddha endowed with ten powers, it is that man whom I call [truly] a brāhman."

I have already noted some spellings like gamra = gambhīra. The end of this pāda presents some difficulty. It is hard to believe that our text does not correspond to that of the Pāli. In the syllable which I transcribe as r, we could, it is true, admit the elision of v, just as we have ascertained that of the b in supraudhu and praujhati, A⁴, 4, 9. It does not yet appear to me certain, a little probable though it may be, that the reading should be bi, with the frequent change of v into b; although half of the last letter is destroyed, what remains of it does not seem to warrant the letter da, and I do not yet see any other reading to suggest, that may at the same time be plausible to the sense and consistent with the trace of the manuscript.

a. This reading suggests the form maṇḍabhāṣan, "who speaks little," as understood from the Pāli texts; it is much more probable than the form maṇṭabhāṣā, which the scholiast takes great pain, though in vain, to explain.

b. The r is distinguished by the elongation of the right branch of the m (frag. of Plate B). I should not decide, with certainty, if the text has ṛ or ṛwa.

- c. The reading manru seems very clear on the fac-simile of M. d'Oldenburg. There has been a confusion on the part of the scribe, but this confusion is easily explained; in the Kharoṣṭhī writing it is indeed a form of s, which is only distinguished from dh by the terminal hook being drawn to the right. This hook is turned towards the right in s and towards the left in dh. This detail seems to prove, as one would expect, that the copyist was working on a manuscript written in a hand similar to his own

Cf. Dhammap., 374.

- a. I should linger awhile over the reading I suggest for this word; for the conclusion I have come to regulate a whole series of parallel cases; I would speak of the second character. It is certain that the n is usually marked in this manuscript by a hook placed at the foot of the consonant and more or less inclined towards the right, besides more or less closed, so as to appear occasionally as a small circle, somewhat oblong. The sign which we have here below our m is also a hook, but more rounded and more open than the other and, particularly, placed more towards the right of the consonant. If we consider this circumstance, viz., that the sound mn is usually noted by a special character, it must be avowed, in spite of a certain similarity that the sign scribbled below should be distinguished from the sign u, and that therefore it is not mu that ought to be read. Given the form of the anusvāra in the epigraphic alphabet, we might incline to find it here again; but surely, the anusvāra is not generally noted in our manuscript; and in the only case, absolutely certain, which I may have cited already—it is in the St. Petersburg fragments—it presents, on the contrary, the exact form of m; I cannot, therefore, see in our hook an anusvāra, but simply an m final, written below, as often in the epigraphic texts in Dévanāgarī. The reading samanṣati will, in itself, be unlikely: it is especially in the word brāhmaṇa that our sign reappears; the transcription bramaṇna is equally inadmissible. The comparison which is forced with the anusvāra of the inscriptions is, however, instructive. Everyone admits that this form of the anusvāra is nothing but the m turned round. I think that, in the same way here, our hook is nothing but the m turned round, but preserving its normal value. The sign will be thus =mm. In all the cases where I have pointed it out, this analysis is absolutely satisfactory. Had it appeared only in the word brāhmaṇa, one might surmise a compound mh; but, apart from the unlikelihood in writing, there is no room for an h in the present case. There is an example which appears to me to be decisive for the interpretation I propose, and which I for my part am finally convinced of; it is in the St. Petersburg fragments, in the verse which corresponds to Dhammap., 82, where the word cannot but be read as gammiro=gambhīro. Cf. also the two verses in the same fragment, which correspond to Dhammap., 81, where we are authorised in the same way to read sammijati (i.e., mmi instead of miṁ)=sammijati of the Buddhist Sanskrit and also of Pāli. As regards the s=ś of sammusāti, it is explained perhaps by the nearness of the r, somewhat like s=śr (cf. śrutvāna A⁹, 10). Nevertheless, the ordinary transcription of Sanskrit rś is ś, as in śakima, l. 32.

- b. The compound ndh is generally written n with the stroke of aspiration above, so that it might almost be interpreted as ndh or nh, as baṇṇa=bandhana n 49 (?) and elsewhere. Here the mark of aspiration is wanting. Precisely in the same way, is for kh=sk. The spelling udaka=ndaka, which is quite peculiar, is reproduced in C^{ro}, 18. Similarly we will find dhoreka^c (C^{ro}, 31).

- c. Neither do I construe nor understand this last pāda like the previous interpreters; I cannot believe that placed as it is, the pronoun tam may refer to priṭṭhamoḃja. I am of opinion that it is necessary to cut off the sentence at the end of the third pāda, and that the fourth should be translated literally: "liberation from death is [the lot] of him who knows [of those who know] it", that is to say, of those who, knowing it, practise it and destroy the skandhas. For the suppression of the medial j, suffice it to refer to parvailasa of A₄, 3.

- a. On account of the break the reading of the character ye (= je) is not quite certain; but to me at least the reading seems infinitely probable.
- b. The commencement of the pāda can only be read in the light which the comparison with the Pāli lends us. The half verse of the Dhammapada forms the end of a hypermetric stanza of six pādas. Ours on the contrary forms, as can be seen, the first third of a stanza of that kind. It is obvious that the arrangement of our text is the best: the half-verse mitte bhajassu, etc., connects itself, as badly as possible, with the śloka that precedes.

The lower part of the letters having disappeared, the reading in the first pāda, is not sure for all the characters; after paḍi we may allow sadhara which will be well=the Pāli santhāra; but the top of the next character has not at all the appearance of a v, but rather of a g. Did our text read paḍisadharagut?

Datu is, of course=dāntaḥ, and ayara=ācāra. We have already met with nihaṣṭi (A², 6). Our form is midway between that of Sanskrit and that of Pāli viḥṛīti. In Pāli, besides the change of r(i)ṣ into ḥ, which seems to surpass the middle level of phonetic degeneration in that dialect, we should notice the spelling i for ya, which appears also to have been derived from a habit of writing, more free and less regular than has generally prevailed with its literary fixity. Likewise has this only normal form been partly supplanted by spellings like kūhasi, kāhati, kūhanti side by side with kāhisi, kāhiti, kāhinti, which appear isolated and peculiar.

For the character bh of salabhu, cf. A², note a. I need hardly remark that atimaññati should be understood in the sense of "to despise, to disdain". Childers and M. Max Muller have already corrected the slight oversight of M. Fausböll.

I have discovered no means to distinguish a priori the m from the co-joined r in compounds like tr, tm, sm, se. It is perhaps svihao=spṛṣṭhayan, that ought to be read. The instances we have already cited, where ṣ is changed into m (A¹, 3, note b), have induced me to think that it might be the same here. But I do not see that it would be to any positive purpose to decide between the two transcriptions. In verse 25, we will meet with the usual change of sp into ph. For the change into o of the final syllable of the present participle, we may compare anuvici(m)tao and anusmaro (II. 22, 23).

b. For prasajhati = prasamsanti, cf. the note on A³, 17. I take gu for ghu (with loss of aspiration as in kudha = skandha) = khu i.e., khalu, which is also represented by ho and hu.

Bahoṣukena is well explained as = bahussukkena, bahu autsukya, and "energy, activity" is a satisfactory meaning. One would, however, expect s, rather than ś, for ts. To make amends, the Pāli bāhusaccena, if it is, with Fausböll, to be derived from bahu + sata (= smṛta), ought to double the s: bāhussacca. As the compound śr is usually changed into ś in our dialect, one may almost ask if the original reading should, as Childers seems to suppose (Dict., q. v), have been bāhusacca = bāhuśrutya, so that our two variants would be parallel deformations from it. It is so much the more difficult to decide it, as, after all, our text bahoṣukena, such as it is, is irreproachable for the sense, and—in view of the confusions between the sibilants, of which the only verse that follows exactly gives us two examples—very much acceptable for the form. Mano for pana(h), punaḥ with p changed into m.

The plural phusamu is certainly preferable to the singular, by the more general turn it gives to the thought. For the substitution of ś for s, cf. sammasati (verse 13).

Our text would confirm, if there were need of it, the correction that Childers (J. R. As. Soc. n. ser. V, p. 225) has rightly introduced in the Pāli text, vissāsaṁ māpādi for vissāsam āpādi; for, the cases where the final m is, in this manuscript, preserved by Sandhi, are quite rare, however a priori the division mśpaśa ma^c may be by far the most probable. I scarcely doubt that the two letters, half lost, may have been padi; but I am not quite sure, so as to represent them in the transcription. The medial compound in mśpaśa hardly appears clear here. For the different aspects of the compound letter, cf. mśpa in the next line, and v(i)śpaśa, C^{vo}, 24 (23?). Striking is the resemblance of the normal form of the compound with the compound figuring on the monuments of Spalagadames, Spalahores, Spalirises, which is generally transcribed as sp and śp (Bühler, pl. I. l. 29); I dare not declare myself in a decisive way between readings. Meanwhile, there cannot be any doubt about the word, which is śiśvāsa, to be sure; and dental (i.e., s) is then unduly palatalised in this text; and this irregularity is explained without doubt, as in śaśana (ll. 28, 29; A,² 4), by the presence of another palatal ś; there is thus but little chance that this palatal ś could have been introduced in the preceding syllable, where it is justified by the etymology. I therefore incline to the reading śp, and introduce it in my transcription. Compound figures here only as representing a unit śr. It does not appear to me to be a sufficient reason to transcribe it as śv and risk the distance of a dialectic peculiarity which likens it to a well-known peculiarity of Zend. To be sure, śarakaśaye = śarāpte śarakaśaye is what the manuscript reads—a stereotyped verse-end which we have already met with (A¹, 6, 7) and which I regard as more genuine than the turn adopted by Ali.

 suits very well, just as at the end of the verse, maturu, which is certainly a gross error of the copyist, is for marutu = mārutah. It is perhaps a great deal to own two mistakes of the same nature in the same line. The general sense is in every way clear: "The monk

It goes without saying that our compound is saṅgūdhiko and that it well answers to the Pāli in sense,—“who is above the five bonds though not in form

a. Strictly, it is rather alageto that the manuscript has, nevertheless, the vowel stroke appears to pass a little beyond the hook of g. It is, besides, very difficult, in most cases, to decide with certainty if the copyist wished to write e or i; to judge of it by a host of examples would not attach to it any importance save a quite relative value.

b. The o is comprised in the upper hook of the s.

- 40 yo najakamo bh.v.ṣ. s.r(?)^a bhikhu jabati o..... viva udumareṣu^b

Cf. Suttanipāta, 5.

a. There is no trace of the stroke of aspiration above ja. I am, I believe, sure of the reading mo. We have already met with several proofs of the tendency of this dialect to labialise the a into u after m. It quite seems that our manuscript must have had a reading wholly equivalent here to that of the Pāli. Meanwhile, it is impossible to restore bhavesu saram; the stroke of the vowel is wanting above the v; as the ṣ which follows is certain, we are allowed to ask if it is not a gross error of the copyist.

b. Our text appears to have transposed the second and the fourth pādas. It is the more singular that the second half of the stanza forms in this verse and those following, a sort of stereotyped cadence. I do not see what sense the comparison might have at the end of the verse, where it seems to have been transported from the second pāda. Be that as it may, we may, on the likeness of Cr^o, 1, 2, admit that it should be completed as puṣ[ṇ]nira u^o.

Here we come to a series of stanzas, which find their Pāli counterparts in the first chapter, Uragasutta, of the Suttanipāta. Unfortunately, the lines that are about to follow are still more fragmentary than these. Some fragments, several of which can be reconciled with certainty, enable us to fill up only a part of the gap; no line can be completed entirely. These restorations concern especially the end of verses, and this end is here uniform for all; what remains of the commencements is short and occasionally doubtful, lastly, although the threads along the margin may be preserved, the scraps which still adhere thereto in the principal leaf B, could not with certainty be re-instated in their proper places and with their respective intervals. In the circumstances, it will be understood that I have not been able to reunite in a decisive manner the beginnings and the ends of line.

It seems at least certain that the eight line-ends, as far as and including that which ends in the cipher on the margin, succeed one another without interruption. Above and below, the leaf is broken, some gaps are then, a priori, allowable; but, as to the lower gap, the visible tension of the thread on the left appears to exclude it. The cipher on the margin marks, besides, the end of a chapter; with the line that is prolonged, the last of our eight lines,—ends then the series of stanzas of uniform frame.

If now we looked at the beginnings, it would not appear that, between the line yo upa^o and the line yara vana^o, there are missing more lines than one, viz., that of which the beginning yo eca sari is preserved by the Fragment B vi

This being granted, the fragment B xiii, which fits in surely above the end of line 42, preserves the remainder of a previous stanza of the same structure. A line, then, is certainly dropped after the one which we number 40. Is one only dropped?

To consider the beginnings of line gaps scarcely seem to be noticeable. If we fill up with a line

(to each), we will have eight commencements as against eight ends, and all will appear to agree.

But the fragments A vi and A v, which hold together, apply with certainty to the ends of lines 42-45. It will be necessary then that the beginning yo upat should belong to verse 42. Now, if vikaya and saitha correspond well, which I cannot doubt, to vigayha and osudhehi of the Suttanipāta, the commencements yo upa^o and yo mana^o, indisputably continued by Fr. B x, can only belong to ll. 43 and 44. This adjustment is, it will be seen, confirmed by the lines that follow.

It implies the omission not of one but of at least two verses. The fragments B iv and B iii, which make up the rest, should be joined to the commencement yasavana^o. The uncertainty which the comparison with Pāli might raise on this last point and on the connection of the end of line kapa...with the commencement yo necasari of l. 48, does not appear to me to counterbalance the possibilities which I have pointed out. The real difficulty lies elsewhere.

The figure on the margin of l. 49 gives 40 as the number of the stanzas in this chapter. In our arrangement we should have 42. It is not probable that a figure marking the units should have been dropped. By supposing the loss of a single verse this contradiction can be partly reduced. It has been seen that verse 14 occurs twice. It might be said that our copyist has committed a very gross mistake and that the cipher was right. But the hypothesis of a gap of two verses does not support this explanation; for it must be 41. It only remains for us to take the cipher as a mistake. I understand how extreme this procedure is. But I have found no means as yet to avoid it. It is important, at all events, to remember that the agreement of Fr. B x with the commencement of lines 43-44, that of Fragments B vi and B xiv with the commencement of lines 45-47 and 48-50, and that of Fragments B xiii, A vi, A v, B ii, B v and B vii with the ends of lines 41-48 are equally unassailable.

I beg to be excused for having entered into such long details in connection with fragments which are very incoherent and of little or no interest but it should be the duty of an editor not to neglect them

- b. The reading saṭha appears with certainty to result from joining the two fragments. The striking similarity which these characters have with (o)saṭhehi of the Pāli and, at the same time, the difference which renders the interpretation thereof so doubtful, are misleading. If at least we had ṣaṭhai, we could believe in a hardening of ḍh into ṭh, and in a spelling i = hi. It is useless to risk conjectures for which we possess only too narrow a basis.

Cf. Suttan., 8-13.

- a. The formula which constitutes the first pāda, here and in the preceding stanza, and which is reproduced in verses 8-14 of the Suttanipāṭa, is embarrassing. This time we have neca, as surely as we had eca in the previous line. In both cases we have preca, to be sure. This ill agrees with the Pāli text such as M. Fausböll's edition gives us. That text is in itself very doubtful and obscure. M. Fausböll analyses na-ati-sarati, pratisarati. According to this hypothesis, neither the long ā, which however is contrary to metre, nor the long ī which the metre demands, is explained. As regards the rendering "he who did not go too fast forward nor was left behind" (S. B. E., X², p. 2), it only affords, over and above the difficulties too evident to dwell upon, a very vague meaning, which hardly satisfies me. Unfortunately, it is more easy to criticize than to substitute a clear version for it. The persistence of the vowel e, and of the reading preca in our Ms., appears to me at least decisive against the reading of the Pāli. On the other hand, the persistence of the u in the Pāli, face to face with the divergences of our text, makes me inclined to admit for both the cases necca, so that the antithesis between na eca and na precca might be established, that is to say, na etya na pretya. But what is to be done with sari, for such is the spelling which the measure seems to require? Sarin occurs in Pāli in certain compositions, as arajinsari (Suttanip., 685), to mean "he who guides himself, who takes his course towards." In etyasarin and pretyasarin I propose to see some expressions formed on this type and opposed to each other, to mean "he who is raver on the way to come to this world or to leave it" in other words "he who is freed from the round of rebirth and death."

The letter p, though cut off mid-way, seems certain, as regards that which precedes, it might be the remainder of a p. This reading kapa, at the end of the second pâda, would make us think of verse 16 of the Suttanipâta, of which the second pâda finishes with netukappā; it is true that the first pâda does not contain the formula yo neccasarī, etc. This is still one of the reasons that leave some doubt in me about the precision of agreement which I have attempted to show between the beginnings and the ends of lines. It is in some measure aggravated by the circumstance that the beginning of our line 50 appears to agree with the first pâda of verse 16 of the Suttanipâta, so that if the two adjustments were justified, it is to the commencement of line 50 that it would be suitable to join the present line-end. I have pointed out the difficulties with which a similar adjustment would be confronted; it would render impossible the combinations proposed for the preceding lines, several of which appear surer and more convincing than this one. Besides the uncertainty lurking in the reading kapa and the possibility, quite open, of variations between our text and the Pâli version, it will be seen that the identification of our l. 50 with the Pâli beginning of stanza 16 is far from clear.

- a. It is natural to think that the commencement corresponds well to the first pāda of the Pāli⁴, and vanadhia = vanathajā should have nothing surprising in such cases, where the j is more than once eliminated between two vowels; ś for th would, on the other hand, have for its defence, the comparison of śisīla for śithila. The letter read a which follows, has a slightly abnormal aspect and the upper hook is much more rounded than ordinarily. If the fac-simile is compared, it may be ascertained that vanaśia, such as it is written, is not different from vanadhia. Perhaps the scribe had committed a mistake in the reading, which must necessarily have been reflected in his copy.

[Foot-note. ⁴ The fac-simile might make us believe that it must be read yase vana^o; this would be a mistake. A very small piece of bark sticks above the s, and it is the shade that is reflected from it which, in photograph, appears as ink-mark.]

- b. The character m in half is still discerned before śa. Therefore, I can but little doubt that our two letters represent the end of the word visallo which occurs in the next verse of the Suttanipāta. If it is so, our text would represent, for the Pāli, a variant which must have more or less completely associated a pāda of verse 16 with a pāda, or part of a pāda, of verse 17. I have stated farther above (l. 40, note b) the motives which, in spite of this difficulty, and although the fragments B iv and B iii may not be connected with the fr. B xiv by any external evidence, have persuaded me to tie up these diverse remains into a single stanza

I like to remark, without attaching to the observation any more certainty than is proper, that fr. B III seems to agree quite conveniently with the little that remains of this line in the principal leaf. I have already said farther above (l. 40, note b) why the figure 40, which marks certainly the end of a chapter and the number of verses it contains, appears inaccurate. It is, I am of opinion, 41 or 42 that ought to have been written, and the margin is so little affected that I dare not venture to admit that the index of these units was eaten away.

o. vanas . . . ru ^a

I can make nothing out of what remains of the last pâda. I regret all the more that the tail of the s, which is clearly recognizable, is traversed by a semicircular stroke, which undoubtedly formed with the auxiliary letter a a compound, of which it might have been interesting to fix the value.

We have already met with, and will come across several times as we proceed, the n surmounted by the stroke of aspiration to express nāḥ of Sanskrit. I do not here decide what exact pronunciation this orthography corresponds to. The reading jayati appears very certain. We cannot think of janati, written by y for v, since the first syllable would be short. I can only see in it the equivalent of the Pāli yāyati which I find, for example, in Mahāvagga, v, 9, 4, and which I interpret as a term derived by extension from yāti. The j is for y, just as we have often in this manuscript the inverse, y for j.

- a. The reading saghadhadhamaa appears to me certain, except the last letter which might be e or i; the lower part is not visible. The word remains difficult. I can only get out of the trouble by admitting that the scribe has, through mistake, written saghadha for sagara = saṃkhāra. This is what follows from a comparison with the previous verse. Sagara = saṃkhāra would, in itself, not be inexplicable. Cf., however, line 14. As regards the second part, it only remains for me to take dhamae = dharme, just as we have in the inscription of Takht i Bahi śatātimae, etc. The expression "which is in the condition of dunghill," "which is like the dunghill" can be justified. It seems that the reading is almost hote, which should be = bhūte. If it is not certain, it is at least highly probable. The transcription prudhi = prthak is remarkable.

a. This verse and the next are cast in the same mould, the elements of which we recover, disjointed and loosely differentiated, in verses 106: māse māse sahasena yo yajetha satamīsamam, and 70: na so saṅkhātadhammānam kalam nagghati solasiṁ of the Dhammapada. The equivalent of our six stanzas is found again exactly in the Uḍānaruga, translated by Rockhill, chap. xxiv, where it seems that the text must have been closely nearer ours. The first half-verse, however, is there translated: "Whoever performs month by month, a thousand sacrifices, for a hundred years", which corresponds exactly to the Pāli text. I understand our reading sahasena ṣatena ca in the sense which the text, by multiplying the ciphers, imposes upon the indefinite or infinite number of sacrifices.

b. In the verses following we have neva which is the only correct form, because, whether neva or navi, it must be = nāpi. "He who would, month by month, offer sacrifices by hundreds and by thousands, does not earn a sixteenth part of the merit that procures faith in the Buddha

Cf. Udānav., xxiv, 28.

nasamasi sahasena yo yaea śatīna ca

a. This verse is to be compared with stanza 70 of the Dhammapada, which reads, according to the right correction of Childers: samkhātadhammānān. Here the reading saghatā° is excluded, and one can only hesitate between saghadha and saghasa; the last letter has suffered indeed. It seems very well, however, that the black point which still appears below, marks the end of the hook turned from left to right, which characterises the s. On the other hand, we have, in line 4, met with saghadhadhama, where the dh is as certain as difficult to explain, and I was in that case obliged, for want of something better, to take dh for r as a copying mistake. I do not see any other alternative than to suppose an error similarly here, s for t. If it could be read dh, this peculiar transformation of t into dh should at least have a counterpart in samadha of line 37 (16?) and, not to go so far, in kusidha=kusīda in line 17. At all events, in spite of their close exterior resemblance, it is quite unlikely that the two qualificatives should be identical in both verses: the sense required by the context is in the one case as unfavourable as it is only favourable in the other. It may be admitted here that the use of an oft-occurring exp n ke verse corresponds stanza 33 of the Uddānavarga, of which the rendering "he who explains well the holy law" appears to reflect the expression saṅkhyābaddharma.

- a. The mutilated consonant to which is attached the e may be t or r. I know no means to decide between the two, any more than complete the line. The Udānavarga has four stanzas, 29-32, which may strictly correspond to the spirit of this; yet, as the numbers 29-31 are composed on a unique formula, slightly differentiated in each case, which is in keeping with the turn of the next stanza, and as, on the other hand, the termination agn suffices to prove that our present verse was not imitated from the next, it is likely that it was to verse 32 of the Udānavarga that this formed a pendant.

a. The śloka of six pādas of the Pāli appears in our manuscript under the form of a regular double śloka; the third and fourth pādas develop the idea contained in the first two. I dare not propose anything to fill up the gap of three syllables. The reading jatū of our Ms. suggests instead a correction for the Pāli text, which appears to me to be certain. Jantum has only been explained as -jantu, a nominative by some ptable devices. It is jatū that should be read in the Pāli and understood here. The vowel

I do not see any other alternative. The compound śucisatya, although it is rendered well in French with a unique literalness "(he) who speaks the pure truth," is not, however, a current expression. Sādhujīvana: "of good life."

- a. I know few cases in our Ms. where it would be tempting to seek for an anusvāra under-written, more than in the cu of acata, so much accentuated is the hook at the foot. But that would be imprudent; if one compares dhi of cavadhi in the foregoing line, and cu of carita in the line preceding that, one will, I think, share this impression and conclude that the scribe, while at work, readily amused himself with making manifest the minute details of certain characters

- b. We see that in this pāda our text deviates from the Pāli version, and simply says : " He whose malignity is extreme like (irāṇa) [that of] the mālukā creeper in the forest " ; and, in fact, a passage of the Lalita-vistara (p. 259, l. 2) characterises this plant by the epithet asakheḍā, without any other explanation ; for my part, as I am ignorant of what exactly the plant in question is, I should not hope to elucidate the reasons for this vexatious name ; the verse on p. 207, l. 5 appears to indicate that it is a parasite plant and that it destroys the tree to which it attaches itself. The turn of expression in our recension seems to me more simple and original. Whatever it may be, given the Sanskrit form mālu, I suppose that mālu is = mālukā and that the Pāli māluṛā is only another spelling for māluā, formed on the basis of the Pāli rule which does away with hiatus.
- c. Kuṇa = kuṇḍā, Na = naṇḍa, naṇḍa. Vissama has a sense, " vicious, wicked ", more vague and less expressive than the disa (= dris, " enemy ") of the Pāli.

² Fr. C xxx.]

- a.* Although the gap is comparatively small, I have not been able to find out the exact sense of this stanza. The gap before kici should, beyond doubt, be completed by no i as in the fourth pāda, the two having, I think, been identical, and hence I conclude that the last one ought to be read no i kwi kica[k]ali adea which is transcribed: na ca kiñcit kṛiyakāle adeyaṃ, and may mean: "and in the hour of duty he should not recoil from any sacrifice." But I do not know exactly how to complete parijaga, which must go back to the verb pari or pratijāgarati.

By applying purve to the time preceding the hour of sacrifice, we may, however, understand: "it is indispensable (for him) to be awake to his duty" (cf. stanza 35), and we might complete (the word) as parijagurea or parijaguritra. The third pāda has quite perplexed me. As for kicakari it must be a verb; we might assume that it is hidden in dīśa which stands for dīśe, and that tata = tatra has, as occasionally in this manuscript, the sense of "in this world"; but the rendering "let the dutiful man teach in this world the preparation" would morally involve purakarma into a usage which appears to me little probable, and I think that the true analysis fails me. Here is what at all events would, according to these provisional hypotheses, be the general sense of the stanza: "He must at first be thoroughly convinced of his duty; for in the moment of performing it he must not shrink from any sacrifice: let the dutiful man teach in this world the preparation for it; for in the moment of performing the duty he must not shrink from any sacrifice."

- b. The true analysis of dubakati fails me, I am afraid; if we take kati = gati, duba would be left, of which I cannot make out anything; so I am led to hold that dubakati = duṣprākṛti; and on the strength of the use of pakatattā to mean "regular observer of his duties" (Jātaka, I, 236; S. B. E. xvii, 340 n.), I understand it to mean: "who does not observe the rule or the duty." I should add that the letter which I transcribe ka might very well be interpreted = śp. But what to make out of dubakpati? In short I translate: "He who, having once loved his duties, loses the rule of the world, the fool forgetful of the rule loses happiness."

Anyhow this half-verse can only end after a previous description of "those men," and in fact the Pāli half-verse forms the end of a stanza; in our manuscript it begins a line; whence it follows that either it formed the end of a śloka of six pādas, or the thought, collected into a single stanza in the Pāli, filled here two (of the pādas) which completed themselves

Yet, in the sixth, the two texts differ, and I cannot make out anything certain from our taṣa, perhaps a mistake for teṣa. It will be observed that the orthography satana is = saṃtānāṇ, side by side with smati

The beginning of the third pāda would appear to stand comparison with the commencement of Dhammap. 78; yet the identity is the more doubtful, as our fifth letter, though mutilated, well appears to have been, not ra of paraku, but ri. Mucuparayana: compare, for instance, Suttanip., 578 (678^v). "Should one live a hundred years, one would remain vowed to death."

say, dhetsyate) can, on the contrary, be justified by this tendency of nasalisation before the sibilant, of which Pāli and the Prākṛits offer more than one trace. I should only like to recall an example here, viz., bhimsana = bhīṣaṇa. Anyhow our text has the future as against the present of the Pāli. In the Pāli verse I have introduced the certain correction maraṇantam, long since urged by Childers.

In all probability, we should have here had an equivalent of andhakārena onaddhā. An(dh)akar fits well, and prachita = prakṣipta equally; only the termination ti is astonishing; it is also sure that we had something else than the termination °kāre or kāram; besides the metre, the traces that exist below the line after the letter r demonstrate it. I have not arrived at any convincing restoration.

But I know no instance of the use of aparata, and aparata would not, as far as I can see, give any sense. The bottom of the initial letter is perhaps not completely intact ; it is perhaps u which the manuscript originally had. Even with aparata we hardly see what the subject can be : " whose life stops with the dawn."

Lastly, I take ohāraṇa, not on the strength of any instances, for they fail me, but on the strength of the etymology and the evidence of the Abhidhānappadīpikā, in the sense of "suppression, end." I have brought together these two stanzas, a half-verse from each of which makes up a whole stanza in Pâli. This line, I am indeed of opinion, can be confidently restored: [yanimani] arathani alapuna savade; none of the traces that remain contradict this hypothesis.

I have no means to re-establish the first syllables of this line; the result is that the interpretation of what remains visible, ni śisani, remains uncertain. The last pāda of the two lines has tani dastani as opposed to tāni dāṣṭāna of the Pâli. The reading does not seem to be contestable, although the t affects a form which is purely conventional. It would seem rather derived from the dental t. The construction is therefore less normal, but not unacceptable in this form.

Prabhaṅguni (written in the same character as prabhaguna of the next line) implies a base prabhaṅgu, identical in meaning with prabhanga, which has given in Pâli and in our dialect, prabhaṅguna. The verse that follows confirms this form. Vichitani = vikṣiptāni.

Certainly we have not in our manuscript the first person form nimmissam; but as the third letter dha is certain, as an m (perhaps me?) appears also certain immediately before, and as an i accompanied the preceding consonant, nimadha or nimedha would appear probable. It is assured by line 20 it will be rendered

I will say the same about the character which follows dharma, and which I transcribe as ca. Perhaps the verse-end would have explained the present tense here. I understand the verse thus : "The royal chariot, inspite of all its splendour, comes to destruction ; similarly destruction invades the body ; but destruction never invades this Law . . ."

I take ārogya, santutthi and viśvāsa not as members of compound, but as nominatives, and I believe that the Pāli should have ārogyaṇ and viśvāso exactly as it has ābhānaṇ.

Cf. Dhammap., 197.

a. Suhai = sukhāya, that is to say, "for happiness, in happiness." It quite seems that our copyist, who writes verana everywhere, may have had the impression of an adjective verana and not of verina derived from verin, vairin, which is reflected in averino of the Pāli. The locative veraneṣu of the Pāli is indeed difficult enough. I would readily incline to allow an adjective averana as the original reading; perhaps it is not as improbable as it appears at first, if, to start with, the negative averana is taken as formed from a substantive verana, vairana, which might be explained as = vairu; the adjective kiñcana of the next verse would support this interpretation.

- 29 suhai jivāmu kijaneṣu akijana^a kijaneṣu ma . u . . u . haramu akijana ○

a. In interpreting Dhammap., 200, which partially corresponds to this verse and the next, Childers (Dict., s. v.) hesitated on the translation of kiñcana. Was the word composed by means of the technical substantive kiñcana which comprises the triple category rāga, dosa, moha? It seems that the dedoublement of the stanza in our text indicates that the two possible ideas floated alike in traditional thought and were afterwards detached each into a particular strophe. Whatever it may be, the adjective kiñcana can, I think, be only explained, even as I have proposed to do in the case of verana, as derived from the negative akijācana. In the present case the necessity for this periphrasis appears to me quite striking.

(Cf. Dhammap., 200.

- a. The form na, mo=nah is known, for instance, in the language of the Mahāvastu. Kajani is a mistake of the copyist, for kijana.

(Cf. Dhammap., 345.

- a. I do not decide if the original reading was āha dhīra or āha dhīro. The metre proves that the error of the copyist does not consist in a simple inversion yaasa, for ayasa, but, as the Pāli text indicates, in the omission of the second ya, ya asa for ya ayasa. The first word being an adjective, I take daruṇa = dāruṇam, for dāruṇam, dāruṇam and not for dāru followed by vā. It is curious that in the next word babaka we find, inversely, the hardening of j into k.
- b. The reading samrattacittā is certainly preferable to the Pāli sārattarattā which is tolerably obscure. Annala, that is to say, kupḍala.

- a. I have already pointed out the substitution of ś for h etymological ; the last letter might perhaps be strictly read ju instead of chu. Yet the transcription which I give is to me by far the most probable. The memory of words like mokṣa may have facilitated the mistake

On the other hand, the repetition agrees with the Pāli text and with the metre so as to condemn our sukham modati, which is nothing but a lectio facillior introduced through the unconstraint of our scribe or his predecessor, the meaning of which, however, is hardly satisfactory.

- a. Here we have the plural instead of the singular of the Pāli. I take śoyiṣu as a common aorist which amounts to the sense of the present tense. The omission must naturally be supplied as bala^o; it is °carino or °carinu that we expect to have. I do not see any way to do away with the hypothesis of a mistake by the copyist. It seems to me that the simplest correction would be to admit that the copyist has written u for i, the two characters differing only in the elongation, on the right of the vertical stroke, of the extremity of the lower hook; °cari i would be = cārī (for cārīno) ca. In sagata the form of the g will be noticed;

- b. Savrasī* can only correspond exactly to sabbadā if we admit a double irregularity, a Māgadhism and the substitution of s for ś, so as to get a form sarvaśo. To my mind it is much more probable that the scribe is mistaken and has read savrasī for sarvadhi (sabbadhi in Pāli), s and dh differing in this manuscript only in the direction of the lower hook.

- a.* We see that in these three lines the verses overlap one another. In spite of the punctuation at the end of l. 38, the first two pādas of l. 39 of this manuscript belong, like verse 207 of the Dhammapada, to the preceding stanza, which is thus made up of six pādas. The metrical difference between the commencement of the line and the following does not leave any doubt in this respect. The comparison with Dhammap.,

208 agrees with the punctuation that follows cadrimu, so as to prove that with this word ends a new stanza in the middle of l. 40. What follows must have been a fresh śloka of six pādas finishing with l. 41, and, moreover, our l. 10 has not the concluding punctuation at the end.

- b. The traces preserved by Fr. xxxvi for the commencement warrant the reading śuhasoraso.
- c. In spite of its resemblance with the Pāli version, our text deviates in a manner which is sensible enough the verb bhajati repeated in the last pāda appears from the first ; it is here in the third person ; I cannot decide if paṇḍito is the subject or if it represents an accusative paṇḍitam, coordinated with others. The hi that follows dhira seems to be equivalent to tasmā hi, which by a singular exception precedes this strophe in the Pāli text. I do not doubt that our text had not a good tradition, and that the addition tasmā hi is not a minor extension of our simple particle, an extension that would quite explain the frequent use of this formula in other constructions. Our dhoreka is = Sanskrit dhaurēya, with k for y, as we have already met with. I doubt very much if the Pāli dhoraṇha should veritably be = dhaurarāhya (after Fausböll and Childers).
- d. I regret not to have been able as yet to discover a counterpart of this stanza, so that the whole beginning remains quite obscure to me. It seems that the first pādas ought to be transcribed in Sanskrit ratna (the) āropyacurmano parīkṛtyodvāhanam; and supposing this transcription to be exact, we might draw out of it some sense like "having prepared the strap for the foot-board that helps to mount the car," but besides the fact that this would be quite confusing I cannot imagine, given what follows, how the beginning was joined to the end of the stanza. I think that it is necessary to complete the commencement as yada. I take kaṃana either for kāmāna or for a genitive performing the function of the accusative, as is to be met with so often in the style of the Mahāvastu. Admitting then that majati = Sanskrit majjati and that s.h. represent śukha, śukham, I get this meaning : "when one suppresses the desires, one plunges into happiness et a man wish for happiness and let him cast off all desires "

M. SENART'S POSTSCRIPT.

I am happy to be able now to rectify the transcription which I was at first induced to suggest for the verse of the manuscript "Dutrenl de Rhins" that forms line 38 of C^o. I had reasons to present my interpretations only as a provisional hypothesis. The discovery which I have made, in a recent reading, of a very analogous Pāli counterpart, though not wholly identical, has put me in a position to improve it sensibly.

I do not see any reason to change the material reading of the characters, but rather the divisions of the words, and I transcribe now:

pure i kica parijaga—kici kicakali adea ta tadiṣa parikamākiekaraṃ no i kica kieali adea

The Pāli verse is found in the Samuddavāṇijāṭaka (Fausböll, IV, 166 fg.). This is the history of a thousand families of carpenters who, harassed by pressing creditors, expatriated themselves on a boat constructed by their own hands. The wind drove them into the open sea towards a fortunate isle where they settled down only to live in abundance. The company was divided into two, and each obeyed its chief, one of the chiefs was prudent and the other was swayed by greediness; the latter manufactured rum and through intoxication lost the condition which the deities of the isle had put on the sojourn of the new comers. The deities became inclined to avenge themselves by raising up a flood of the ocean that would sweep away the entire island. Warned by a compassionate deva, the wise carpenters prepared a vessel on which they escaped in the moment of danger, the others preferring to believe in the delusive promises of another deva; they perished victims to their idle optimism.

A moral in three stanzas is put into the mouth of the Buddha (abhisambuddhagūṭha), urging on the necessity of foresight. The third one is construed in the text of M. Fausböll as follows:

Anāgatañ paṭikayirūṭha kiccañ mā mañ kiccañ kiccakāle vyadhesi tañ tadisañ paṭikakocakāruṇ na tañ kiccañ kiccakāle vyadhesi

I would prefer to have in the second pāda mā māt or mā tāt; but strictly, by supplying ti at the end, the first person is left open to interpretation. Ṛadheti is, I believe, = ṛgathayati, although the scholiast may seemingly write ṛgādhesi, which the metre does not support and which he seems to take as a denominative from ṛgādhi.

Whatever it may be, the direct relation of this strophe with that of our Kharoṣṭhi Ms. is not less apparent than the differences which distinguish it. From a comparison it follows that it must be understood, by restoring the anuvāras which the manuscript does not note, as follows :

pure (h) i kien(m) pariṇaga—ma (a) m i kien(m) kienkati adea ta(m) ratiṣa(m) parikamakiemkari(m) no (h) i kien(m) kien(k)ati adea

The difficulties are not avoided though the general sense is certain. There is first of all the gap of four syllables : for the first two I can only provisionally maintain the conjecture by virtue of which I have proposed to complete pariṇagaree; pariṇaga being perfectly clear, I do not see how a literal correspondence with parikarati of the Pāli could be admitted. The next two syllables would be ma māt or ma tāt.

In the third pāda parikama, parikarma is on the whole little removed from parikṛta; but the substantive cannot exactly fill the function of the participle. If kṛtya were not wholly employed in all the strophes in the sense of "want", parikarmakṛtya would very well be rendered : "what has to be done by way of preparation." In spite of the difficulties which the particular application of kṛtya in kienkati seems to present against this interpretation, I do not yet see anything else to suggest.

If we pass from the i, certainly wrong, of kien for kia to the second and the fourth pādas, there still remains a stumbling block in adea. To judge it by the Pāli, it would be vaṭṭhe = ṛgathayeyya. A similar deformation is too abnormal to be easily admitted, but the explanation which I have attempted = adeyaṃ failing necessarily, I have nothing satisfactory to suggest; ādeyya, from ādīyati, could be explained, in the sense of "to take, to domineer, to rule", only by forcing the ordinary meaning in a troublesome way.

II

The Kharoṣṭhī Manuscript of the Dhammapada

With improved readings and readjustments

[I. Magavaga]

The heading here, as in other chapters, is our own, and is not to be found in the Kharoṣṭhī manuscript. But the title chosen suggests itself from the burden of the verses themselves. The chapter, as may be judged from its colophon "ga 30" (I. A³, 5) consists of 30 stanzas, of which 17 (i.e., 10-26) are missing from the manuscript in hand. With the exception of the first three which are to be traced in the Saṃyutta-nikāya, all the stanzas are to be found in the Pāli Dhammapada, distributed in two chapters, viz., the Magga and the Pakiṇṇaka, verses 4-9 being in the Pakiṇṇakavagga and 27-30 in the Magga. The total number of verses may itself be regarded as a proof of the combination of two groups of verses of the Pāli recension under one chapter of the Prakrit. The Maggavagga which just precedes the Pakiṇṇakavagga in the Pāli recension, contains 17 stanzas and the Pakiṇṇaka 10. Rockhill's translation of the Tibetan version of the Udānavagga shows that the verses under notice are distributed in the latest known Sanskrit recension in two chapters, the Mārga and the Smṛiti, of which the former contains 20 stanzas, and the latter 25. The Chinese recension, Pu-khen-king, has two chapters, which are named and juxtaposed in the same way as in Pāli. But, as a matter of fact, the similarity between the two recensions is only in name, the stanzas being entirely different though the chapters bear the same title.

"Straight is the name that Road is called, and Free
From Fear the Quarter whither thou art bound.
Thy chariot is the Silent Runner named,
With wheels of Righteous effort fitted well.
Conscience the Leaning Board; the Drapery

And be it woman, be it man for whom Such chariot doth wait, by that same car Into Nibbāna's presence shall they come."

Notes.—The Prakrit verses (1-3), as M. Senart points out, are closely bound up in thought, as they complete together a sort of allegory founded on the imagery which likens Buddhist teaching to a yāna or 'vehicle'. The Pāli parallels of these verses are to be found in the Saṃyutta as belonging to a group of four stanzas, named Accharā ('the nymphs') from the catchword of its first verse which is left out in our text, and which reads :

Accharāgapa-saṅghuṭṭham, piṣācagapasevitam
Vanan-taṃ mohanaṃ nāma, kathaṃ yātrā bhavissatīti ?

The imagery developed in these verses serves to throw the Buddhist idea of the silent spiritual progress of man along the path of Righteousness into clear relief, by contrast with the popular aspiration to attain rebirth in the heaven where Indra, king of the gods, visits the enchanting Nandana-grove in a rattling chariot, surrounded by 'troops of nymphs' making the chariot and the paradise resonant with their music and melody¹, and attended by a 'guard of fiendish warriors'²; and a priori with the popular admiration of luxurious life of princes on earth,³ who frequent in the same way the royal pleasure grove, escorted by troops of women and bands of ferocious soldiers⁴; in other words, with a life of pomp and pleasure.

The central idea of these verses, divested of poetic imagery and spiritual contrast, i.e., in its more primitive natural

psychological form, can be traced in a few verses of the Suttanipāṭa e.g. 1103, 1107, 1109 and 1111, containing Buddha's replies to the questions of the Bāhman youth Udaya. The questions and replies together constitute a poem known as Udayamāyārapucchā belonging to the Pārāyana-group, which as a separate entity constituted one of the oldest known materials of the Pāli canon.¹ In fact, our verses may be justly regarded as a later recast of the idea of the Pārāyana discourse, and the link in the transformation is preserved in a few technical expressions which, though not exactly identical in both, have at least a striking likeness proving their kinship e.g. nirāraṇaṃ (of the Suttanipāṭa) and parivacana (of our Prakrit); dharmatakkapurejara and dharmatakkheḥ sahuto, sameditthipurejara, satassa and amatasa; nibbānaṃ iti evacati and nirvanasera satv; and here it may be noted with profit that the Suttanipāṭa verses themselves presuppose similar Indian ideas, such as those which can be traced in the Kāthopanishad (I. 3, 3-9):

“Ātmānam rathinam viddhi, sarīram ratham eva tu
Buddhim²tu sārathīm viddhi, manas pragraham eva ca
Indriyāṇi hayān āhur viśayānisteṣu gocarān, Ātmēndriyamano yuktam bhoktṛtyāhur mañṣipah.

Tasyēndriyāṇyavaśyāni dus(Āsvā iva sārathēḥ.
Yastu vijñānavān bhavati yuktena manasā sadā Tasyēndriyāṇi vaśyāni sadāśvā iva sārathēḥ.”

Compare also Manu (II. 88):—

“Indriyāṇāni vicaratāni viśayavapahāriṇ Sāmyame yatnamātisthedvidvānyantōva vājinām.”

Verse 1.—(U)jjuo=ujuko. The initial u stands for the Sk. ṛ exactly as in Pāli. The guttural k is elided between u and o. The word is a derivative of ṛju, Sk. ṛju, ‘straight’ Namo=Pāli nāmo, Sk. nāma (from nāman), ‘by name,’ ‘called,’—the same as namo which occurs twice in this verse. The shortening of ai into u is due to a special feature of the dialect of our text which completely does away with all long vowels. M. Senart is not fully certain about the reading o in the syllable mo of namo. The balance of probability lies with the form namu, but the change of u into o in this exceptional form may have been due to euphony, as it is preceded and followed by words ending in o sounds. This is not to say, however, that a strong case is thus made out for the form namo in preference to nāmo, in view of the uncertainty of the reading. So—the same as in Pāli. Magu=Pāli maggo, Sk. mārgah, road. Here is an instance of a nom. sing. form where a masculine stem ending in a is declined with the termination u, instead of o as in ujjho and so. For u instead of o, cf. avaramu (verse 2). We meet with a regular form mago in v. 29 below. Magu is therefore to be regarded as optional. Both the forms magu and mago stand nearer to Sanskrit (mā-gah) than the more primitive forms where Māgādhism holds a greater sway and where the masculine and neuter stems ending in a are declined alike in the nominative singular, e.g., ‘sukhe dukkhe jīrasattamu’ (Dīgha I. p. 56: extract from the Buddhist version of the doctrine of Pakudhakaccāyana, an elder contemporary of the Buddha), and “n’atthi attakāre, n’atthi parakāre n’atthi purisakāre, n’atthi balam, n’atthi viriyam, n’atthi purisa-thāmo, n’atthi purisa-parakkamo” (Dīgha I. p. 53: extract from the Buddhist version of the doctrine of Gosāla, the Ājīvika teacher), of which the Jaina parallel reads: “n’atthi utthāne i rā kamma i rā bale i rā viriye i rā purisakkārapparakkame i rā” (Uvāsagadasāo, Lec. VI., § 166). In our text such masculine and neuter stems are distinguished in declension, though not so distinctly as in Pāli, the masculine form mostly terminating in o and the neuter, as we shall see later on, in u. The underlying moral of the sentence ujjo namo so magu (‘straight by name is the road’) is a familiar Indian idea which is expressed more clearly in the later Buddhist songs. Cf. ujjo re ujjo chūchi mā lehu re rasiha, i.e., “leaving what is straight and straight indeed, O thou shouldst not take to what is crooked” (Buddha-Gān o Dohā, No. 32, p. 49). Abhaya=Pāli and Sk. abhayā, an instance of the feminine ā-declension in the nominative singular. For the shortening of the final vowel, see Namo above. Namu—see Namo above. Sa=Pāli and Sk. sā; for the final vowel, cf. abhaya. Diśa (feminine)=Pāli disā, Sk. diśā. The ś makes the word more akin to Sanskrit than to Pāli, and supplies a bond of kinship of the dialect of our text with those of the Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra recensions of Asoka’s Rock Edicts [cf. Priyadrasīsa (Shah. 1), Priyadrasīne (Man. 1).] Radho=Pāli ratho, Sk. rathah, chariot,—an instance of th changed into dh, and of the regular form of the masc. nom. singular in o.

Akuyano=Pāli a-kujāno according to the Saṃyutta reading; consequently, the Sk. would be a-kujānah, and the meaning, as suggested by M. Senart, would be 'the resort of honest people' and the explanation, 'where the wicked are none.' This interpretation of akuyano and the Pāli reading akujāno on which it is based, are open to dispute for the obvious reason that the meaning suggested and applied to the chariot is hardly in keeping with the appositional adjectives nyau and abhaṇa, 'straight' and 'free from fear', as applied to the road and to the direction. The very expression catha akujāno, 'the chariot where the wicked are not,' is quite unprecedented in Indian literature, not to say, unidiomatic. The meaning which fits into the context, is 'that which is free from creaking' i.e., 'runs noiselessly on,'—akūjāno, "the silent Runner." In fact, the reading in the Sinhalese edition of the Saṃyutta is akūjāno, and the same reading is followed in the commentary, which explains the word as follows:—"na kūjati na civarati tasmā akūjāno ti". In the language of our text the form akuyano can also be allowed in the sense of Pāli akuyāno, i.e., 'not a bad vehicle', but such a word has not been met with in Pāli phraseology. Dhamatrakehi=Pāli dhammatrakkehi (according to Saṃyutta) and Sk. dharmatarkah. M. Senart has suggested with strong reasons on his side that the correct reading in Prakrit can only be dhamatrakehi or dhamadrakehi, the first of which may be interpreted as dhammatrakkehi in Pāli and dharmatarkah in Sanskrit. He cites the evidence of the Suttanipāṭa verse 1101, which speaks of aññārimukha as dhammatakkapurejara, a form which is nearer the expression samedothipurejara in the next verse of our text. Considering that the Suttanipāṭa verse is found in the Pārāyana-group of poems, which as a separate entity formed one of the oldest materials of the Pāli canon (Buddhist India, p. 188), it is, as suggested by M. Senart, quite probable that the reading tarka is older than the reading cakra, which, to quote his own words, "being more ingenious and piquant could, once established, no more have been displaced." It must be readily conceded that the Prakrit form dhamatrakehi clearly preserves the memory of the Pāli expression dhammatrakka, Sk. dharmatarka, although to complete the idea of the analogy of the Buddhist "Path" with the 'chariot rolling noiselessly on,' the substitution of cakra, 'wheel' for tarka, 'reasoning' was natural and inevitable. For nothing but there is no mistake or the part of the scribe or in the reading, the Prakrit form must be taken in the sense of 'wheels.' The change of larka into traka is accountable by the principle of Metathesis. Cf. drumedhino for durmedhasah (Apramadavaga, v. 8), pravatatho for parratusthak (ibid v. 10); drugha for durgāt (ibid, v. 23); druracha drumararuna for dūraksyam (dūr-raksyam) durnirūranam (Citavaga, v. 5); drugati for durgati (Dhamathavaga, v. 4), drugatio (Bhikhuvaga, v. 1); drighum for dīrghum (Suhavaga, v. 38). This kind of change is familiar to the student of Asoka's Rock Edicts, of which the Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra recensions have so close a kinship, in respect of phonology and orthography, with the dialect of our text—a feature which goes to prove the common geographical location of the two dialects (cf. dhrama for dharma, draṣi for darśi Shah. I, Mans. I; sarra for sarva S. M. II; pruva for pūva S. M. v., Girnar v, grabha for garbha, S. M. VI; kramutara for karmāntara, S. M. VI; kratauyē for kartavya M. XI). The instrumental plural termination chi is a common feature of all Prakritic languages and alike of their ancient prototypes the Pāli and Ardhamāgadhī. Sahato=Pāli saṃhato according to M. Senart, but it seems that saṃhito, sahito ('joined', 'linked') would be the proper Pāli equivalent. The Sāmyutta variant of the word—saṃyuto ('connected', 'fitted with') attests the correctness of the above suggestion. The Upanishad passage singled out above as the basis of the Buddhist verses contains the expression yuktena, conveying the idea 'linked with', and the phrase yuktena manasū, i.e., 'with mind linked to' is an older psychological counterpart of the Pāli dharmacakkhehi saṃyuto, 'fitted with the wheels of Righteousness', and of the Prakrit dharmacakkehi sahato, 'rounded off with (the wheels of) reasoned discussions on the Norm', the phrases breathing the Buddhist intellectual bias and moral sentiments.

Verse 2.—Hiri=Pāli, hirī, Sk. hrī, an instance of Epenthesis, meaning, according to the commentator, hri-ottappam, modesty, conscientiousness. Tasa=Pāli tassa, Sk. tasya. Avaramu=Pāli, apālambo. This is the only instance, as noticed by M. Senart, where r is substituted for l. As for m=mb, compare udumreṣu=udumbareṣu in B, 40. The word means, according to Senart, 'skid.' The meaning which agrees with the commentary is 'leaning-board' (Kināred Sayings, p. 45: yodhānam apatanatthāya dārumayan glambanakam a wooden structure protecting the soldiers from falling down). This is also an instance of sandhi ara + aram, corresponding to Pāli apa + ālambo. Note also the change of p into r. Smatisa = smati + asa = Pāli saly-assa, or sattassa, or satassa (sati + assa). The Prakrit form is more akin to Sanskrit a pti, a Buddhist technical term which means 'mindfulness.' Parivarana = Pāli parivaraṇaṃ, which M. Senart renders 'the roof'; but Mrs. Rhys Davids, following the commentary translates it 'the drapery.' The absence of the cerebral nasal ṇ is a peculiarity of the language of our text. The word, as has been pointed out above, is a later counterpart of nivāraṇaṃ (Suttanipāṭa v. 1106) or 'prevention.' The sense is that mindfulness (smati) is like a drapery (parivarana) preventing the influx of impurities from outside. Dhamahu = Pāli dhammāhaṃ, another instance of sandhi—dhamu + ahu corresponding to Pāli dhammaṃ + ahaṃ. The scarcity of double consonants is a characteristic feature of the text. It is to be noted that final aṃ of Pāli and Sk is represented in our Prakrit, generally by u as here, or by o as elsewhere, and occasionally by a as in parivarana. Saradhi = Pāli sāraṭhiṃ, charioteer, driver. For dh = th, see radho (verse 1). Bromi = Pāli bhūmi, I say. The Prakrit form is nearer to Sk. bhrūmi; the shortening of ara into o is common in the Pāli and all Prakritic languages, but neither the Prakrit bromi nor the Pāli bhūmi may be said to square with this rule unless it be supposed that the vowels o and i are assimilated into u or u. Samedithi-purejavu = Pāli sammāditthipurejaraṃ, a compound, meaning 'the right views which like horses run ahead.' The form same stands closer to the Sanskrit saṃyak phonetically than to Pāli sammā.

Verse 3.—Yasa = Pāli yassa, Sk. yasya. Etadiśa = Pāli etādiśaṃ, Sk. etādiśaṃ, like this, such. The Prakrit has followed the Pāli in dispensing with ṛ, but unlike Pāli it retains ś and in this respect stands closer to Sanskrit. For a = aṃ, see parivarana v. 2. The significance of the word 'such,' as implied in the Dhammapadam verse 323, is "such a vehicle whereby a person can reach the untraversed region (agataṃ disaṃ), i.e., Nirvāṇa. Yana = Pāli and Sk. yānaṃ, vehicle. For the final a, see etadiśa above. The conception of the Path as a vehicle is a later imagery, later than ayana or maggā of the older Buddhist discourses, both denoting 'path.' Cf. Ekāyano ayam maggo (Satipatthānasutta, Majjh.). This imagery was consummated in the subsequent growth of the conceptions of

'Mahāyāna' and 'Hinayāna,' distinguished as two prominent phases of the Buddhist faith, perhaps on the lines, in a sense, of the Vedic and post-Vedic distinction between Devayāna and Pitryāna, with this difference that the word yāna in the older texts does not imply the idea of conveyance but of the path along which the soul proceeds, after death, to its destined end. Gehiparvaitasa va = Pāli yihino pubbañjalassa vā. The genitive termination has been dropped in gehi metri causa. Here is an instance where Pāli i is represented by e. The opposite process, i.e., the change of Pāli e into Prakrit i is noticeable in etina below, which stands for Pāli etena; that is to say, i and e are interchangeable. Parvaitasa = Pāli pabbajitassa, Sk. pravrajitasya. The rvu is a metathesis for the Sk. vr, probably on account of a false analogy with forms like sarra. Va = Pāli and Sk. vā. The whole expression means 'of the householder or of the recluse.' The Pāli verse has the variant itthiyā parisassa vā, i.e., 'of women or of men.' The Pāli idea seems to be older, as pointing to a time when Buddhism was considered fundamentally a religion of the Bhikkhus, while the Prakrit seems to belong to a time when the Buddhist community, as distinguished from a mere Bhikkhusaṅgha, having been formed, provision had to be made both for the householder and the Bhikkhu in one religious scheme, as was done by Asoka (See Bhabra Elicit). Sa = Pāli so, Sk. sah. Vi = Pāli re, Sk. vai, 'indeed.' The Sanskrit diphthongs ai and au are absent in our Prakrit. The a-i in parvaitasa is not to be regarded as a diphthong. As a matter of fact, M. Senart has noted a parvakita in the St. Petersburg fragments, the intervening h preventing hiatus like the y of the Ardhamāgadhi orthography. For the i in vi = e of Pāli, compare etina = etena following (in the verse). Yanena = Pāli and Sk. yānena, instr. of yana. Nivanaseva = nivāsa + eva, an instance of sandhi corresponding to Pāli nibbānasseva = nibbānassa + eva. Satie = Pāli and Sk. santike, near. Note the elision of h between i and e. The occurrence of an alternative form satii (B. 32) is no more than an instance of the interchange of i and e in the Prakrit itself.

Notes.—The verses (4-9) correspond in wording and sequence to the six verses (7-12) in the 'Miscellaneous' group of the Pāli Dhammapada. The Udānavarga which presupposes an older Sanskrit recension, contains all these verses in its Smṛti-group, the sequence being broken after the third verse, as well as after the fourth, by the intervention of some additional verses which seem to have been composed at some later date on similar lines. The total number of Udāna verses cast into the same mould are 17. There are three verses (9-11) in the same chapter of the Udānavarga, preceding the 'Suprabuddha' series, which, though not regular counterparts, are analogous in thought to the first three of our series, as will appear from Rockhill's translation quoted below :—

"They who day and night are reflecting on the Buddha, and who go to the Buddha for a refuge, these men have the profits of mankind."

"They who day and night are reflecting on the law (dharma), and who go to the law for a refuge, these men have the profits of mankind."

"They who day and night are reflecting on the church (sangha), and who go to the church for a refuge, these men have the profits of mankind."

The 'Suprabuddhu' verses which are primarily intended to eulogise the disciples of Gotama, cannot be found in any other canonical text than the Dhammapada, a negative evidence, which has some bearing on the age of the Dhammapada. We have discussed in our "Asoka's Dhamma" (loc. cit.) how the eulogium of the Three Refuges came to occupy a prominent place in the Buddhist faith and how the older conception of the Three Refuges (tiśarāṇas) in the Dhammasūtra (Dīgha, II. p. 93) changed into the later poetical ideas of the Three Jewels (tiśatānas) in the Ratana-sutta (Suttanipāṭa and Khuddakapāṭha). We have further shown that this change of idea took place in no less than a century. The ruling idea of the 'Suprabuddhu' verses which seems to have been a supergrowth of the tiśarāṇa or tiśatāna idea, must be relegated to a time when the sāvakas became the mainstay of the Buddhist faith. And springing from the optimistic tone of the verses, it seems that these were the compositions of a time of active Buddhist propaganda when Buddha's disciples deserved to be praised as 'truly awakened' only by carrying their master's behest expressed in the words "ārabbhatha nikkhamatha yuñjatha Buddhasāsane"¹ (start, come out and flock to Buddha's standard) and "Ko attho supitena vo"² (what's the use sleeping?). The Pāli Dhammapada contains the minimum number of 'Supraudhu' verses and the Udānavarga the maximum. Our text, the Prakrit Dhammapada, contains all the 'Supraudhu' verses of the Pāli text, and as 17 verses (10-26) of Magavaga are missing from the Kharoṣṭhī Ms., it is difficult to say how many of them belonged to the 'Supraudhu' group. But we have other instances where the number of verses of a particular group, e.g., the 'Sahassa' group, varies in different recensions, the minimum generally being in the Pāli and the maximum in the Udānavarga,—the Prakrit and the older Sanskrit being 2nd and 3rd in order. It is, therefore, reasonable to think that of the verses missing in the Kharoṣṭhī Ms., some at least must have belonged to the 'Supraudhu' group,—in other words, that the Prakrit verses outnumbered the Pāli. One may look upon this multiplication of verses as a result of a most mechanical attempt to swell the number of verses without any new articulation. But to us it has a two-fold significance:—first, that it brings out certain ideas which are implicit in the central theme, and secondly, that it sets forth a chronology of thought as well as of literature.

Verse 4.—Supraudhu = Pāli, suppabuddham, accusative adverb. The word is cognate adverbial object to the verb praujhati, the idea being 'they awake with a good awakening.' The conjunct consonant pr is not to be found in Pāli and Ardhamāgadhī and seems to be a special feature of the dialect of our text as well as of the Shāhbazgarhi and Manshira recensions of Asoka's Rock Edicts. In Pāli r combines with a preceding labial b in such exceptional cases as Brahmā, Brāhmaṇa, Brahmadatta, and with dentals t and d in a few words like yatra, tatra, bhadra and inbriya. The Prakrit has kept to the Sanskrit so far as pr is concerned. The omission of b between a and u can be explained by an intermediate change of the labial b into the semivowel r, which latter merged into u, the two sounds ru and u being very much similar. The simplification of ddh into dh is one of the many instances which exemplify the tendency of the dialect of our text to do away with double consonants. The final u=au (cf. prajau, v. 2). Praujhati=Pāli pubbujjhati, Sk. prabudhyanti, 'they awake.' The Prakrit and Pāli forms are in the Parasmaipada, while the Sanskrit is in the Ātmanepada. For the omission of b between a and u, cf. suprandhu. The jh seems to have been simplified from jgh which corresponds to Sk. dhy. The ti which is a plural termination corresponding to nti, is an instance of phonetic decay. Imi=Pāli and Sk. ime. For the change of e into Prakrit i see elina (v. 3). This reading is, according to M. Senart, much better than the Pāli sadū. But we cannot agree with him as im is quite unintelligible here, the verse being detached from the context. We think that a general term like sadū is better. Gotamaṣavaka=Pāli Gotamasāvaka, Sk. Śrāvaka. This is an instance of genitive compound. The ṣ seems to stand midway between Sk. śr and Pāli s. The final ā of the plural is shortened, as all long vowels are, in our text. Yeṣa=Pāli yesam, Sk. yeṣāṃ. The Prakrit stands closer to Sanskrit so far as the ṣ is concerned. For the final u standing for Pāli aṃ, see yana (v. 3.). Diva=Pāli and Sanskrit divā. Ya=ca. Cf. ayara=āvāra (B. 19). Rati=Pāli ratti, Sk. rātri. The idiomatic form ought to have been ratto. The form rati (nom. sing. instead of locative) is perhaps an instance of false analogy with dina considered as nom. sing. Ca—We have an optional form ya above. Nica=Pāli niccāṃ, Sk. nityaṃ. For tya>cca>ca cf. dhyā>jgha>jha in praujhati above. Budhakata=Pāli Buddhagatā, 'turned towards the Buddha'. The Prakrit ka is here equal to Pāli ga. The word is a compound. Smati—See verse 2.

Verse 5.—Dhamakata=Pāli dhammagatā, 'turned towards the Dhamma'.

Verse 6.—Saṅghakata=Pāli saṅghagatā, 'turned towards the Saṅgha'. The gha corresponding to ṅgha is perhaps an instance of phonetic decay.

Verse 7.—Ahiṃsai=Pāli ahiṃsāya, Sk. ahiṃsāyam. The final i replacing the yaṃ is an instance of phonetic decay. Rato=Pāli rato Sk. ratah 'letting 'n'. Mano=Pāli mano Sk. manas.

Verse 8.—Bhamanai = Pali bhāvanāya, Sk. bhāvanāyām, 'in meditation'. For the change of v into m cf. Pali nāvaṃ = Prakrit nama (B, 35).

Notes.—Here is another group of verses, three in number, which inculcate the religious significance and necessity of viewing 'all created things', in the light of the Buddhist doctrine of impermanence, suffering, and non-identity, as constituting the path to Purity i.e., Nirvāṇa. These verses cannot be traced in the older portions of the Nikāyas, though the views of life which they embody can be ascribed to the Buddha himself.

It is evident from Buddha's exhortation to his son Rāhula¹ that he wanted to impress upon his son and to others, who were in a similar stage of ignorance and inexperience, the necessity of constantly being mindful of the three supreme truths or facts of common experience viz., impermanence, suffering and unsubstantiality. Not that he was indulging in a pessimistic vein, but that he was, viewing fact as fact, trying to incite and inspire the thoughtless and indolent to be active and energetic for the attainment of that tranquil and serene state of consciousness which is possible to attain through the effort of human will in this very life. There can be no mistake about this cardinal motive of Buddha's admonition, and he was consistent to the end, as may be judged from his last utterance: "Handa dāni bhikkhāre āmantayāmi vo: vajjadhammū saṅkharū appamādena sampādethe"² (Now I charge you, O bhikkhus: subject to decay are created things, be energetic in the performance of duties). A growing change in Buddha's doctrine of Appamāda is perceptible in the later moralizing tendency and pensive mood of his disciples and followers, and it is no wonder that the death of so great a man like him served to heighten the feeling of impermanence and excite a pessimistic mood, which held a permanent sway over the Buddhist mind till at last the spirit of the doctrine was lost sight of, and that which had been to Buddha a means to an end, turned out in the hands of his followers to be almost an end in itself. Thus Sakka, king of the gods, was made to sing perhaps long before the Dhammapada verses were composed :—

Uppajjitvā nuujjhanti, tesam rūpasamo sukho 'ti.”¹

The result was that the Buddhists of subsequent ages came to regard the truths as formulas for mystic repetition and as mantras for counting beads.

Verse 27.—The second line may be restored, with the help of vv. 27-28 as follows:—tadā nivinati dukkha eṣo mago viśoḍhita ○). Savi=Pāli sabbe, Sk. sarve. The correct reading appears in v. 29. In other instances also we meet with rv instead of simply r. See, for instance, M. Senart's fragments B vi : [sa] rrakeleśa, and B xiv : sarva. M. Senart, however, has nothing to say regarding this difference. If the reading sari be correct we have to regard it as an optional form of sarvi which makes a nearer approach to Sk. sarve, the final i affording another instance of the interchange of e and i. Saghara=Pāli saṅkhārā, Sk. saṃskārāḥ, created things. Here it may be supposed to stand for 'organisms' or 'bodies with their different organs of sense and of action.' The substitution of the sonant gh for the surd kh with the guttural nasal ṇ is an instance of Compensation. Anica=Pāli aniccā, Sk. anityāḥ, impermanent. Cf. nica, v. 4. Anicati=anica + iti, an instance of vowel sandhi. Yada=Pāli and Sk. yaḍā. Prañaya=Pāli paññāya, Sk. prajñayā, with clear cognition. The optional forms are prañae (v. 38), prañai (I. A³, 9). Paśati=Pāli passati, Sk. paśyati. The ś makes the Prakrit form closer to Sanskrit. Tada=Pāli and Sk. tadā, correlative of yaḍa. Nivinati=Pāli mbhinhati, Sk. nirvinati or te. The Sk. forms mean 'gains,' which is not applicable to the sense here. The Pāli and Prakrit bear resemblance to Sanskrit only in form, but in idea they seem to be connected with Sk. aviredu, Pāli nibbēda, 'sense of indifference in regard to pain, arising out of a true knowledge of the real character of existence.' This meaning is suggested by Buddhaghosa, and is also borne out by the Tibetan version. M. Senart quotes Childers who interprets it: "only does he conceive disgust for [existence which is nothing but] pain." For the omission of r compare sare above; a for ad is a phonetic decay. Dukh(a) stands for Pāli dukkhe. The Prakrit seems to be an accusative singular corresponding to Pāli dukkham, in which case the verb nirivati must mean 'rightly understands'. As regards the Pāli dukkhe, we might take it as an acc. plural, though a locative singular construction would have been more idiomatic.

Verse 28.—Dukhati=dukha + iti, another instance of vowel sandhi. Cf. anātma te (v. 29). Prañae=prañaya of v. 27, the final e standing for ya. Gradhati=Sk. granthati (according to M. Senart), to be explained on the analogy of saṅkhāra=saghara (v. 27). Gradhati stands for Pāli paṇṇati, sees. It may be necessary to inquire if the Prakrit word has anything to do with Pāli gādhati (Udāna, p. 9), 'dives into,' 'penetrates.' Gradhati=granth te according to M. Senart, means, as he understands, 'deduces, reasons, concludes.' There is no such word as granthati in Sanskrit, the proper form being grathnāti, if we are to derive it from the root grath 'to link, to weave.' M. Senart's suggestion is ingenious enough, and would have commended itself to our ready acceptance if the form could be settled from the philological stand-point. The equation of gradhati with granthati would be quite on the lines of the change of saṅkhāra into saghara (vv 27, 28), i.e., the change of the first aspirate conjoined with the nasal of the group into the second aspirate. But the equation is not permissible in the present case by the meaning of the word. Gradhati is apparently used in the same sense as paṇṇati of the preceding verse. Accordingly, it must be equated with a Pāli or a Sanskrit word of which the derivative meaning would be 'to see.' Such a Pāli word we can think of is gādhati (Sk. gāhate) 'to dive,' hence 'to penetrate, to realise.' Cf. the Pāli Udāna, I, p. 9: "Yattha āpo ca paṭharī tejo vāyo na gādhati." The difficulty is to account for the gra in place of gā. This may be explained by a process of False Analogy with the Sanskrit form grāhṇāti from √grāh 'to receive' the fam. var. not on of the grahya gralaka relation of and objects being presupposed. A phrase "yatttha paññā na gāḍhati" occurs in a Jātaka verse (Fausböll, III p 508 f.), and gāḍhati is explained in the commentary as meaning "gāḍhaṃ patitthaṃ na labhati" i.e., "(where wisdom) gains no footing."

Verse 29.—Sarvi=Pāli sabbe, Sk. sarve. The Prakrit form almost coincides with the Sanskrit, the i replacing the e, a feature which is very common in the Prakrit of our text. Anatmati=Pāli anattā (anattā + itī) Sk. anātmā (anātmā + itī). This is another instance of vowel sandhi, similar to dukkhati in v. 28, and anicati in v. 27. The Prakrit form keeps closer to Sanskrit. Such instances as these may, we think, have been the results of the process of Sanskritization of an older Buddhist dialect. No Buddhist conception has been so much misunderstood by critics, both ancient and modern, as that of nātmā, which literally means 'no-soul.' The negative form of the word ātmā or ātman does not imply the negation of all the idea of a perceiver. It implies indeed the negation of the older Upanishadic theory of the soul as an unchangeable substratum of all changes and mental functions as well as of the naive animistic notion of an in-dwelling spirit capable of going out and coming into the body at its sweet will, a notion which is prevalent among all ancient peoples. The Buddhist theory of 'no-soul' replaced these older ideas by a psychological theory of the mind as a stream of consciousness. The verse under notice does not seem so much concerned to bring out the philosophical idea of 'no-soul' as to accentuate the necessity of renunciation. Cachuma=Pāli cakkhumā, Sk. cakṣuṣmān, 'he who has eyes to see.' In this instance the Prakrit keeps closer to Pāli. For the change of kkh into ch, compare rachati for raṅkhati (I. A³, 14), and avechati for avekkhati (I. A³, 16). We also meet with a reading cakhuma in the next verse. The change is from kṣ through assimilation into kkh, which is first palatalised into chh, and is then reduced to ch for facility of pronunciation. Ma for Sk. mān is an instance which shows that the Prakrit like Pāli has done away with the final consonant, so that the equation would be ma=mā, but since our Prakrit has no long vowel, the ā is shortened into a. The interest of the reading paṣati cachuma instead of prañaya paṣati as in verse 27, and prañae gāḍhati as in verse 28, lies in the fact that it makes manifest the underlying metaphor of wisdom regarded as an eye or mode of perception, the prajñā being considered as the prajñā-cakṣu.

Notes.—This verse, as will appear from the first quotation above, occurs at the beginning of the Pāli Maggavagga. In our text it is placed after the "anuloma" verse, i.e., v. 29, while in the Udānavarga it precedes the "anica" verse, i.e., v. 27, and in the Pāli it is placed before three verses preceding the "anica" verse. The verse under notice cannot be traced in any other extant canonical work, though the underlying idea is a familiar one. The praise of the Path which is the theme of our verse serves to wind up the teaching of this chapter.

Magana = Pāli maggaṇaṃ, genitive of the Prakrit mago or magu. The genitive is in the sense of the locative; of the Paths = among the Paths. The significance of the genitive plural of the word mago or magu is that it makes explicit the contrast of the Buddhist Path with those followed by others, a contrast which is tacitly implied in many genuine utterances of the Buddha. Compare, for instance, the expression "Ekāyano ayaṃ bhikkhave maggo" = "This, O bhikkhus, is the only Path" (Mahāsālāpattāna-suttanta, Dīgha II). Athagio = Pāli atthaṅgiko, Sk. aṣṭāṅgikah, an instance of sandhi and compound (atha + agio), meaning that which has eight parts, 'the eightfold.' Atha is simplified from Sk. aṣṭa through the intermediate Pāli attha. Agio = Pāli anugiko Sk. anugikah. It has already been noted that it of Pāli and Sk. is dropped in our Prakrit in instances where it is conjoined with a surd of the same consonantal group, and the surd itself changes into the corresponding sonant (e.g., paya for Pāli panka I. A¹, 5; saghara for savkhāru, v. 27; sagupa for saṅkappa I. A², 9). But here we have an instance where the nasal of the guttural group is conjoined with the sonant g. The nasal is dropped but the sonant remains unchanged. Cf. sagamu for saṅgāmo (I. C¹⁰, 6). The k is dropped between i and o here. For the omission of k between i and e, cf. satie (v. 3), between i and i cf. satii (I. B, 32), between u and o cf. ujno (v. 1). But it is not dropped after a, as in akuyana (v. 1), saraka (vv. 4-9). Aṭṭhaṅgiko or 'the eightfold' is a Buddhist technical term denoting the Buddhist Path which leads to Nirvāṇa conceived in its negative aspect as the complete cessation of suffering, a generic name for all painful experiences of mankind. The significance of the term 'Eightfold' is that the Path is expounded as consisting of eight parts or categories, the right views, the right resolve, and so forth. This path is counted as one of the Four Truths, viz., the fourth, concerning the way. Seṭho = Pāli settho, Sk. śeṣṭhaḥ. For the simplification of tha from Pāli ṭha, cf. athugio above. Sacana = Pāli saccānaṃ, Sk. satyānāṃ, genitive plural. For c see unica (v. 27). Cauri corresponds to the Pāli reading caturā. It strictly equates with Pāli cattāri, Sk. caturāri. M. Senart rightly points out that cattāri or caturāri is in the Buddhist dialects readily used for the masculine. He further suggests that though cauri appears to be the direct reflex of caturāri, it may better be connected with caturā, the change of o into i being only mechanical. Indeed cauri is the result of a mixing up of the two forms—masculine and neuter—caturā and cattāri, caturāri. See M. Senart's Notes (p. 12). Pada corresponds to the Pāli reading padū. The corresponding form in Sanskrit would be padāni (neuter pl.). But the question is whether caturā padū cannot be regarded as the Pāli counterpart of the Sanskrit 'caturāḥ padāḥ,' 'four portions or divisions,' taking padāḥ in the sense of mātrāḥ. For the conception of the 'four padās' cf. the Māṇḍūkya Upanishad: So'yaṃ ātmā catuṣpāt: prathamāḥ padāḥ, dvitīyāḥ padāḥ, etc. The masculine form of the Pāli will be well accounted for, if we trace it to the Upanishadic conception of 'four divisions.' The Prakrit padu, considered without the neuter numeral cauri, leaves us in the dark as to the gender it denotes, for it may stand alike for padu and padāni. In the case of cauri we have supposed with M. Senart the intervenient on of an intermediate form caturā. A similar confusion of two forms—masculine and neuter, padā, pl. (Pāli), pādāḥ (Sk.), and padāni (Pāli and Sk.)—can be said to hold good in the case of the Prakrit padā, which appears to have retained a masculine form in an undetectable way. It seems that the history of pāda was forgotten in Pāli and the word came to be confounded with padā. A glaring instance of such confusion is furnished by the Buddhist expression cattāri dhammapādāni (in the sense of dhammapādā), explained also as the four divisions of the Norm, that is to say, explained in the light of the old Upanishadic classification of ‘four pādas,’ though in the garb of padā. As a matter of fact, there is no difference in sense between pāda (masc.) and padā (neut.), though there is much in respect of grammar. Saccānāṃ caturā padā is another way of saying cattāri ariyasaccāni, the familiar expression for the Four Noble Truths. Viraku = Pāli virāgo, Sk. virāgah, ‘dispassionate-ness.’ For the change of the sonant y into the corresponding surd k, generally after a, cf. Budhakata for Buddhagatā (v. 4.), and for the final v for o, cf. magn (v. 1). Pranabhutana would equate with Pāli pāṇabhūtānaṃ, an instance of saṃāsa. The meaning is—‘of living beings.’ The Pāli reading is dipadānaṃ (‘of the bipeds’), a narrower comparison which is implied also in the Udānavarga. The form pāṇabhūta equated with pranabhuta actually occurs in Pāli. Cf. the expression: “ye kece pāṇabhūt’ atthi” (Suttanipāta, v. 116). The Prakrit pranabhutana and the Pāli pāṇabhūtānaṃ seem to have been the result of a confusion of Sanskrit bhṛta with bhūta. Having regard to the fact that the older Upanishadic expression prāṇabhṛt denotes a living being (cf. prāṇabhṛtsu, Ait. Āraṇyaka II 3. 2. 2), this theory of confusion would seem sufficient to explain the Pāli or the Prakrit form as corresponding literally to Sanskrit prāṇabhūtānām or prāṇabhṛtānām, the former of which, however, would not be free from objection on one ground or another. The Sanskrit genitive plural of prāṇabhṛt is prāṇabhṛtām. The form prāṇabhṛtānām will be justified if it is corroborated by the actual use of a stem prāṇabhṛta in Sanskrit literature. The proper Pāli form would have been pāṇabhūtānaṃ and the corresponding Prakrit pranabhutana. Cf. Pāli bhato equating with Sk. bhṛta in the Nikāya expression “bhato nesaṃ bhariṣāmi” (Digha III. p. 189). Cakhuma keeps closer to Pāli cakkhumā than cakhuma of the preceding verse. Indeed this reading is a typical illustration bearing out the theory of the derivation of many Prakrit words of this text through some intermediate Pāli forms.

Ga 30—M. Senart takes ga to stand for gaḍha (gāṭhā), thereby interpreting it to imply that the group or chapter contains 30 stanzas. But unfortunately he has not made use of this numbering to systematise the verses according to chapters as has been attempted in the present edition. This has been the cause of a very serious drawback in his otherwise valuable work, and we shall see more of it when we deal with the next group of verses.

[2. Apramadavaga]

The group of verses under this head, all deal with 'apramāda', and this is the justification of the title we have chosen for it. The group consists of 25 stanzas, as may be judged from the number mentioned in the colophon "ga 25" (I A¹, 8). In the Pāli recension the 'Appamāda' group has 12 verses, and forms the second chapter of the book. The Udānavarga verses grouped under 'Apramāda' (wrongly rendered "Purity" by Rockhill) number 35 and form the 4th chapter. These three recensions of the Dhammapāda have many 'Appamāda' verses in common. The title in the Chinese Pu-Kheu-pi-n (see sec. x., Beal's translation) is the same as in Pāli, but the chapter has hardly any verse in common with the latter. The Pāli 'Appamāda' verses can not be traced in any other canonical text, but there are some in the Prakrit text and the Udānavarga which can be traced. It will be noticed how M. Senart has laboured under a disadvantage in trying to number serially whole verses on a leaf, regardless of their central theme and of the number indicated in the colophon marking the close of a chapter.

¹ The reading in M. Senart's edition is utiṭṭha, but he says that the omission of the final e may be due to the neg gen e of the scribe and not to any dialect o larity

Notes.—This verse which marks the beginning, according to our arrangement, of the second chapter of the Prakrit text seems rightly included in the 'Appamāda' group; the occurrence of it in the 'Loka' group of the Pāli text is hardly justifiable, as its relevancy to the general reflections on the world is very slight. The Pāli arrangement of verses, as noticed before, is generally loose, the compiler having in many cases made an injudicious selection of verses for a group, for he seems to have been careless of the distinctive tone of a particular verse justifying its inclusion in a particular group. For instance, in the present verse, though a greater stress is laid on Appamāda than on Loka, the verse seems to have been included in the 'Loka' group simply because it happens to contain a word about Loka. The compiler might as well have put it in the 'Appamāda' group, but so far as the device is mechanical, he is consistent. On the other hand, though the Prakrit text has quite consistently grouped together all the verses of which the main theme is appamāda, it has a serious drawback in that it does not put in the beginning, as has been done in the Pāli text and the Udānavarga, the most important verse v.g., "appamādu amatapada" etc. (v. 6 infra), which brings out the essence of the teaching of the 'Appamāda' discourse as a whole.

Uttiṭhe=Pāli uttitṭhe, Sk. uttisthet (Optative), 'one should rise up.' The word reminds one of the exhortation in the Pāli Uttānasutta:—"Uttahatha viśīdatha ko attṭho supitena eva" (Suttanipāta, Bk. II. No. 10¹).
Na pramajea=Pāli naḥpamajjeyya, 'one should not relax,' an optative form keeping close to the Pāli. Pramajea, as opposed to uttiṭhe, implies primarily an idea of sleep or dozing or a morbid state of body and mind as experienced by a person dead drunk, and secondarily, as here, that of a state of inactivity, indolence, thoughtlessness, moral cowardice or a want of will, energy and religious enthusiasm to strive for the best within human reach.

Dhamu sucarita cari, which corresponds to the Pāli dharmāṃ sucaritaṃ care, reminds us at once of the Taittirīya command 'dharmāṃ cara' (i.e., 'fulfil the law'—moral but not discordant with the cosmic). This expression, when coupled with na pramajea, reminds us of another Taittirīya command 'dharmān na pramaditavyam', i.e., 'one should not swerve from the principle' (see Taittirīya Up., I. 11. 1). In sucarita cari we have another instance of a Buddhist expression where a past participle sucarita is used as a cognate adverb (cf. suprawidhu pranjhati, Magava, v. 4 ff.). For dhamacari compare a variant dhamayari in I. c^o, 30—another evidence of the interchange of c and y. As to śeati M. Senart thinks that it rests "not on the usual form śeti, but on the form śayati, aya being written e". But it would have been, perhaps, more correct to say that it is a compromise between śeti and śayati, evincing a tendency to incline to the latter form. That the normal use is śeti is clear from I. c^o, 30. The word śeati is significant as showing how the Buddhist verse dwells upon the idea of sleeping; here it means the enjoyment of a blissful rest, i.e., Nirvāṇa. Asmi=Pāli asmīṃ, Sk. asmiṃ. In the Prakrit of our text sm, unlike the Pāli, is nowhere changed into mhi. Parasa=Pāli parassa, a form with a genitive termination but used in a locative sense (cf. sugataṇḍasa for saṃkārakūṭasmiṃ, I. c^o, 3). Yi=Pāli ca, the usual form being ya (see Magava. vv. 4 f.). The i of yi is, perhaps, due to a desire to maintain a rhythm with the i of the previous word asmi.

uthanena apramadena saññamena damena ca
divu karoti medhavi ya jara nabhimardati ○

(A³, 7)

Cf. Dhammap., v. 25 † (Appamādev. v. 5):—

Uṭṭhānena appamādena saññāmena damena ca
Dīpaṃ kayirātha medhāvī yaṃ ogho nābhikīrati.

Cf. Udānav, ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 5:—

The wise man though eximiousness virtue and purity makes himself an island which no flood can submerge

Notes.—The Prakrit verse exactly corresponds to the Pāli, so far as its first line is concerned. In the second line we have, in karoti, a present singular form in place of the Pāli optative plural karīrātha, and in medhavi a nom. sing. form in place of the Pāli plural medhārū. The Udānavarga reading, so far as it may be judged from Rockhill's translation, is similar to the Prakrit. The verse-end with the reading jara nabhimardati, of which the Pāli would be jarā nabhimaddati, 'decay does not crush', is peculiar to our text, while the Dhammapada and the Udānavarga agree in having a different reading. As it is, the Pāli expression ogha nabhikirati appears more appropriate than the Prakrit jara nabhimardati in a simile where the imagery of an island is present. But virtually there is no difference, for it is really a jarā-ogha, 'the flood of decay', that is meant here, as is evident from the testimony of Therag., v. 412 :—

"Suyathāpi mahāsamuddhavo evaṃ jātijarātivatāte taṃ,
So karohi sudīpano attano tvaṃ, na hi tāpaṃ tava vijjateva aññam."

The sense of ogha in the Pāli reading is too indefinite, the Prakrit makes it explicit by jara, and nabhimardati is as aptly used with jara as nabhikirati is with ogha. M. Senari's suggestions (I. v. 7) seem rather laboured and far-fetched.

(Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 6 :—

"Tis the earnest that become far-famed by their diligence, reflection, the purity of their lives, their judgment, their perfect observance of the commandments) by their whole life which is according to the law

es — This verse is in tone the same as vv. 1-2, and corresponds in form to the Pāli except for hi in place of ca after sañātusa and yaśidha vadhati in place of yaso'bhī. There is nothing more to notice than the change of c into y in suyikamasa, the change of k into c in niśamacarino, and a vowel sandhi in yaśidha (yaśa + idha). The expression niśamacarino might also be equated with Pāli nisammacārino which is a synonym, in a narrower sense, of dhammacārino.

Cf. Dhammap., v. 280 † (Maggav., v. 8):—

Uṭṭhānakālamhi anuṭṭhahāno yuvā bali ālasiyam upeto
 Saṃsannasaṅkappamano kusīto paññāya maggaṃ alaso

Cf. Udānav., ch. XXXI. ("The Mind"), v. 31:—

'He who remains seated when it is time to rise, who, though strong and young, sits slothfully at home, who is always careless in his thoughts, will not find the road to wisdom.'

es.—This verse which sets forth the evil effect of indolence and thoughtlessness, exactly corresponds in form as well as in tone to the Pāli except for the word smatima in place of kusīto, 'indolent.' M. Senart rightly points out that the expression smatima is inexplicable, unless it be supposed that it is asmatima, the initial vowel being elided through a sandhi with the previous word. In this verse, as in many others, one cannot fail to notice the Buddhist method of defining a term by juxtaposing a host of synonyms differing from each other in slight shades of meaning, the total effect being the intensification of the main idea. Uṭhana-alasa anuṭṭhahato = Pāli uṭṭhānakālamhi anuṭṭhahāno, "he who remains seated when it is time to rise" (Udānavarga), a negative expression followed by a positive synonym in the second foot. We fully agree with M. Senart that in utthanulasa we have another form with a genitive termination for the locative (cf. parasa in v. 1.). Yoi stands, according to M. Senart, for yo ayaiñ. He thinks that "this reading is assuredly preferable to purā." But in both the Dhammapāḍa and the Uḍānavarga we have purā, and we need not necessarily suppose that yoi = yo ayaiñ, since yoi may alike be equated with purā, i being a change from rā, perhaps through an intermediate ya. °aṇṣanasagāpamano = Pāli saṇṣannasāṅkappamāno, 'having an irresolute mind,' 'in a state of indecision.' In a few instances the nasal ñ is retained before s as in ahiñsa (= ahiñsāya), Magavaga, v. 8, and bheñsati (= bheñsati), Jaravaga, v. 5. As for the change of uk into u (sagapā = saṅkappa), see notes on ahugā in Magavaga, v. 30, and saghara, op. cit., v. 27.

The Ms. reads uṭhane alasa. The alteration has been made above in accordance with M. Senart's suggestion.
Smatima is joined to the preceding word because of sandhi.

Yo ca appamāṇī pi sūtvāna dhammamānī kāyena paṣṣati
Sa ve dhammadharo hoti yo dhammamānī na-ppamajjati.

Notes.—The expressions of the Prakrit verse are similar to those of its Pāli counterpart except for tu in place of ca and ho (= kho) in place of ve. The verse under-values 'much learning' without any original vision or perception of truth. In the Pāli Dhammapāḍa we have two other verses, vv. 18-19, where this Buddhist view of learning is inculcated more emphatically and with a direct reference to the established method of Vedic study: cf. "Bakumpi ce sūhitarū bhāṣamāna," etc. A man who can recite many hymns (sūhitarū) but does not act according to the injunctions laid down therein, is compared to a cowherd who counts the cattle of others without being able to claim them as his own. In course of time when Buddha's doctrine and discipline were rehearsed and put together, or when the Buddhist texts were compiled, the old evil crept into the Buddhist system. The acknowledgment and originaity of conception have been the bane of all Sanskritic studies. The Buddhist judgments on two contrasted types are well worth consideration : (1) a Dhammadhara without an original vision, and (2) a Kāyasakkhī who has a direct perception of truth. Dhamadharo = Pāli dhummadharo, a custodian of the Buddhist faith. In a passage of the Mahāparinibbānasuttanta a Dhammadhara, i.e., a custodian or rehearser of the Sutta Pitaka in later nomenclature, has been distinguished from a Ṭṇayadhara or a mātikadhara, the terms being replaced in later phraseology by Ṭṇaya Pitaka and Abhidhamma Pitaka. Dhamu kaena phaṣai would strictly equate with a Pāli dhammaṃ kāyena phussati, 'touches the law with his mud' Nevertheless the Prakrit reading phaṣai is as good as the Pāli phussati, 'sees.' Here we have a description of a kāyasakkhī (see Anguttara, I. p. 118, Majjhima, I. p. 478).

Etaṃ viśeṣato ñatvā appamādaṃ paṇḍito
Appamāde pamodanti ariyānaṃ gocare ratā.

Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 2:—

"The wise who knows this difference delight in modesty and purity : their pleasure is that of the elect."

Notes.—The teaching of the whole chapter is put in a nut-shell in verse 6 and, as a matter of fact, this verse is put at the head of the chapter in other recensions than the Prakrit. The moral inculcated reminds one of Shakespeare's famous pronouncement that 'cowards die many times before their death', while 'the valiant die but once.'

Verse 6.—Yadha mutu (singular) would strictly equate with a Pāli yathā mato, Sk. yathā mṛtaḥ, 'like one dead.' The Prakrit reading seems more emphatic than the Pāli.

Verse 7.—Viśeṣadha improves the Pāli reading viśeṣato, meaning 'particularly' (cf. viśeṣato of the commentary). M. Senart takes viśeṣadha as 'formed by the suffix dhā, which may in this case very well supply the suffix taḥ of the Pāli'. To us, however, it seems that viśeṣadha = Pāli viśeṣattan, Sk. viśeṣattan, 'difference.' Apramadasa = Pāli appamādaṃ. Here is another form with a genitive termination for the locative singular, cf. paraṣa, Magav., v. 27.

Pamādan anuyañjanti balā dummmedhino janā Appamādanā ca medhāvi dhanaṃ setthān va rakkhati.

Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 10:—

"The (mind of the) fool who is given up to carelessness is perverted th ra na not be caref as in the lead of a caru a wata ng l s treasure es.—There is nothing more in this verse to explain than the simile dhana śethi va rachati, which, according to M. Senart, should be equated with a Pāli dhanaṃ setthi va rakkhati (i.e., like a banker watching his treasures). To M. Senart the reading sethi appears to be decidedly better than the Pāli settham, which gives only “a vague and colourless epithet.” While we cannot dispute his interpretation of sethi as a banker, “the head of a caravan” (Udānavarga), it seems that the expression dhanaṃ settham va is not at all colourless as he thinks, the idea being “as a man keeps watch over a precious possession” e.g., over the seven jewels, as the commentary suggests, or over a ‘Kohinoor,’ for instance.

 (A³, 15)

CE. Dhammap., v. 29 † (Appamādev., v. 9) :—

Appamatto pamattesu suttasu bahujāgaram Abalassamū va sīghasso hitvā yāti sumedhasso.

es.—This verse closely resembles in form its Pāli parallel except for the reading bhadraśu (= bhadrosso) in place of sīghasso. The expression bhadraśu is less satisfactory as an antithesis of avalaśa (= abalassam) than sīghasso. The term bhadraśu denotes a well-trained horse, cf. usso bhadro kasānūra, Dhammapada, v 143. The simile in the second line is that of a race in which a fast horse leaves behind a weak one. The teaching of the present verse is somewhat different from the moral of the story of the Hare and the Tortoise, in AEsop's Fables, which is that the slow but steady win the race. Avalaś = Pāli abalassam, a vowel sandhi (avala + aśa). M. Senart singles this out as the only instance where v has been substituted for b. Bhadraśu = Pāli bhadrosso, a sandhi (bhadra + aśu). Sumedhasu = Pāli sumedhasso, a compound meaning ‘having a good brain-power,’ which is a synonym of medhant in the preceding verse.

Pamādam appamādena yadā mudati paṇḍito
 Paññāpāsādam ārya asoka sokiniṃ paṇḍitū
 Pabbataṭṭho va bhūmatṭhe dhiro bāle avekkhati.

Cf. Uḍānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 4 :—

"When the wise men through earnestness have overcome heedlessness, then, steadfast through wisdom, they ascend to above the abode of the gods, and, free from sorrow and pain, they look down as from the summit of a mountain at the fools on the face of the earth."

Notes.—The teaching of this is in spirit the same as that of the previous verse with this difference that the similes are changed. The first simile is that of a royal personage looking down from the balcony of a palace at the multitude, who walk along the street. Aruyu = Pāli ārya. For the reading, see M. Senart's Notes. We might just notice that the u of yu (= hya) is due, perhaps, to the loss of the aspirate, resulting partly from the interchanged positions of h and y in Pāli. Since the Prakrit form appears to be possible more from yh than from hy, it is necessary to point out that it presupposes a Pāli original. Bhumattha and bala have singular accusative endings.

10stbī Ms., line A², 1, with the reading “. . . maḍenamakabha devanasamidh(i) gat.”, appears as a remnant of a verse of which he was able to trace no parallel. The discovery of the connexion of A², 1 with A³, 17 is a momentous event in the compilation of the present edition. We need not point out at length the errors to which the French scholar was led on account of this oversight on his part Makabha = Pāli Maḡharā. The aspiration of b compensates for the change of gh into k through an intermediate g Samidhi = Pāli saṃidhiṃ, which may be substituted as a synonym for the Pāli setthataṃ, cf. saṃiddhū att no, Dhp. v. 84. Prāsajhuti = Pāli pasamsanti, Sk. prāsa- santi. M. Senart assures us of the correctness of his reading. But we should have expected a reading like prāsajisati, remembering that in our text the m is changed into n before s.

tes —In this verse, which is exactly similar in expression place of seveyya, we have an exhortation not to have anything to do with sensuality, thoughtlessness, wrong views and popularity.

(Cf. Udānav, ch. xvi. ("Miscellaneous"), v. 5.—

"He who formerly was heedless and who afterwards has become careful, like the moon free from clouds, he brightens up the whole world."

Notes.—In this verse we can perceive a change of tone, as we have in it a message of hope for those who have so far been thoughtless, like an Aṅgulimāla, and cannot aspire to live a better life on account of their sinful disposition. The teaching of the simile in the second line is that sin is but a passing shadow of the mind which darkens man's spiritual prospects. Pramajati=Pāli pamajjati. A right reading would, according to M. Senart, have been pramajeti or pramajiti=pramajitra. As for ita=etam, see M. Senart's Notes. Suriu=Pāli sūriya, an instance of Epenthesis (ria=ryah). It seems that in the language of our text an aspirate after y is vocalized and changed into u; cf. uruyu (v. 10). The Prakrit reading is a stronger expression than the Pāli candimā.

Cf. Divyāvadāna, pp. 68, 138:—

Ārabhadhvam niṣkramata yujyadhvam buddhasāsane
Dhuniṭa mr̥tyunaḥ saṃyamaṃ naḷāgāraṃ va kuñjaraḥ.

Cf. Udānavarga, ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 34:—

"Arise, commence a new life, turn towards the doctrine of the Buddha; trample down the hosts of the lord of death as an elephant does a house of mud."

¹ This verse together with verses 15 and 16 is to be considered as a blended whole. In the Theragāthā, the Saṃyutta and the Divyāvadāna, the counterpart of the Prakrit verse 15 is absent and those of vv. 14 and 16 only are found grouped together while in the Dīghanikāya vv. 15 and 16 constitute a whole, v. 14 being absent.

Notes.—Now comes the awe-inspiring command or the charge, as if in a lion's roar, from a great conquerer like Buddha the Sākya hero. The command and its tone are indeed worthy of such a master who achieved self-conquest through a valorous will not to cease to strive, whether 'the sky be rent asunder or the earth leave her fixed station' (nabhūn phalacyga, paṭhavīn caleyya). It will be noticed that the Udānavarga verse has a different simile, and the expression is weaker than the Prakrit or its Pāli counterpart. Dhunatha=Pāli dhunātha = dhunāta (Dīvyāvadāna), "trample down." The expression is metaphorical, implying the idea of distending cotton. Macuno sena=Pāli maccuno senaṃ="the hosts of the lord of death" (Udānavarga). Here, death is but another epithet of the tempter Māra, whose fighting units are mentioned in the Paṭṭhānasutta (Suttanipāta, No. 28), vv. 436-39.

Notes.—This verse sets forth the first requisites of self-conquest which are that the Bhikkhus intent on defeating the hosts of Māra must be of an undaunted spirit and well-behaved, having a well concentrated will and a well controlled mind. Bhotu=Pāli hotu, Sk. bhavaṭu, a singular verb used with a plural nominative.

Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 35 :—

"Whoever has lived according to this law of discipline, in gentleness and purity, will, having cast off transmigration, put an end to his misery."

Notes.—Now comes the persuasion as an argument in support of the heroic command in the preceding two verses. For comments on this verse the reader is referred to M. Senart's Notes. We have just to add that imasa (=Pāli imas im) is another instance where a genitive termination has been used for the locative.

17 ta yu vadami bhaddaṇṇu yavatetha samakata apramadarata bhodha sadhami supavediti ○
 (A², 7)

Notes.—The Pāli counterpart of this verse cannot be traced. It is the result of a new combination of three set expressions, which are :—

- (1) Taṃ ro vadāmi bhaddaṇṇu yāvattetha samāgatā (Dhp. v. 337 ; Jat. III, p. 387. l. 21) —for the 1st line ;
- (2) appamādaratā hota (Dhp. v. 327) —for the 3rd foot ;
- (3) saddh mme supavedite (Itivuttaka, p. 78) —for the 4th foot.

² The correct reading according to M. Senart would be dukkhasaṇṇa.
 The circ e is sup o hv us

For the explanation of the Prakrit forms, the reader is referred to M. Senart's Notes.

- 18 pramada parivajetva¹ apramadarata sada
bhavetha kuśala dhama yōkachemasa prataa.

Notes—The Pāli counterpart of this verse cannot be traced. The Suttanipāṭa verse 425 contains the expression yoga-kkhemassa puttīyū which corresponds to the Prakrit verse-end. As a matter of fact, a Jātaka verse (Fausbøll, I. pp. 275, 278) supplies us with an almost exact Pāli parallel to the 2nd line by the reading—Bhūietī kuśalaṃ dhamaṃ yōgakkhemassa puttīyū. Prataa=Pāli puttīyū. The Prakrit form rests on a Sanskrit rather than a Pāli word.

- 19 . . . prata suhino² apramadaviha . .

Cf. Udānav., ch. vi. ("Morality"), v. 20 :—

"This is the road that leads to happiness, he who has entered on this road of perfect purity" will by keeping to it cast off the bonds of Māra."

Notes.—The Pāli parallel of the above verse cannot be traced. Rockhill's translation of the Tibetan version of the Udānavarga verse, cited above, is also so tentative that it is difficult to establish a complete identification. There is, moreover, no certainty that the second line of the Prakrit is identical with that of the Udānavarga verse. It is unmistakably true that the verse under notice is modelled on a gāthā of which the counterpart is supplied by the Dhammapada, v. 57 and the Udānavarga, v. 19, ch. vi, which are quoted below :—

Tesaṃ sampannasīlānaṃ appamādaṃ dāraṇānaṃ
Sammadatūñāvimuttānaṃ Māro maggaṃ na vindaṭi

¹ The Ms. reads parivajets : the alteration has been made according to M. Senart's suggestion.

² M. Senart reads prata and suhino as one word. We, however, think 't better to separate 'em' he'gh of o restora on Ro k il's rendering of π nada

"They therefore who leave in thoughtfulness, who are perfectly purified by their moral conduct and who are emancipated by the perfectness of their knowledge, will not meet with the road of Māra."

The first foot might be completed, in the light of the expression te khemapattā sukhino (cf the Pāli verse in Majjhima, III. p. 187), as te chemaprata sukhino, and the second, in the light of the Dhammapada verse cited above, as apramadaviharata. As regards the third and fourth feet, we are at a loss to decide whether these are similar to those of the Dhammapada verse 57, or of the Udānavarga verse 20, or of the Majjhima verse or of a different one. In this state of uncertainty we can at the most hazard this fourfold restoration:—

(1) in the light of the Dhammapada verse 57:—

samadaññarimutana muno magu na vinati ○

(2) in the light of the Udānavarga verse 20 (ch. v):—

apramata viharata jahati m ravanana ○

(3) in the light of the Majjhima verse

("Subhaverabbhayāttā sabbadukkhañ upacengutā") :—

saravirabbhayatita sarvadaha nrañi ○

(4) in the light of the Apramada v. 25 (i.e., Senart's A¹, 7):—

apramata viharata pranoti paramu sukhu ○

Adopting the last alternative, the verse might be restored thus:—

(te chema)prata sukhino apramadaviha(rino)
apramata viharata pranoti paramu sukhu ○

Chemaprata sukhino = Pāli khemapattā sukhino, 'those who are happy after having attained to the state of security, i.e., Nirvāṇa'. Chema is a shorter form of yokachema = Pāli yogakkhema, a synonym of Nibbāna. This is the same in meaning as paramu sukhu.

Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 8 :—

"Have nothing to do with false doctrines, have nothing to do with the heedless; he who delights not in false theories shall not continue (in) the world".

Cf. Ibid, ch. iv., v. 11.—

"He who is not given up to carelessness, who finds no delight in pleasures, whose mind is always attentive, will put an end to sorrow"

Notes.—The exact counterpart of the Prakrit verses cannot be traced in the Pāli canon, and the parallel cited above is an extract from the verses ascribed in the Majjhima Nikāya and the Theragāthā to Aṅgulimāla Thera. The Pāli verse occurs also in Saṃyutta I. We cannot but think that the Prakrit verses were manipulated later on one single model which is no other than the Pāli verse. The variations are not inexplicable. The verses are in essence the same, and there are numerous instances where new verses are manipulated by adjustment of certain set expressions. The parallel cited from the Udānavarga is similar to v. 21.

Verse 20.—Apramadi pramodia = Pāli appamāde pamodeyya, 'one should delight in earnestness', which is a positive expression for the Pāli mā pamādam anuyuñjetha, 'have nothing to do with thoughtless indolence'. For the change of eyya into va, see M. Senart's Notes. Mā gami ratisabhamu is a better expression, according to M. Senart, than the Pāli mā kāmataṣaṭṭharaṇi, 'one should not delight in associating with sensual joys'. He takes gama as an aorist singular form of √gam (to go), and sabhamu = Sk. saṃbhrāman, the whole expression implying "do not proceed to care for sense-debight". We fail to find any "gross" mistake in the Pālī expression, as opined by M. Senart, except that it is somewhat elliptical, or how saṃbhaṇaṇi could give a better meaning than saṃsāraṇi or "companionship". Who knows that the reading sabhamu for the Pālī saṃsāraṇi is not a gross mistake of the scribe, or that gama is not a phonetic change from kāma, the final i being accounted for as due to a desire to maintain rhythm with raṭi following. We quite appreciate that ma gami raṭi, in the sense in which M. Senart takes it, improves the Pālī reading. But it is rather desirable to leave open the question raised by him as to the chronology of the two expressions. Viśeṣa adhikachati = Pālī viśeṣam adhi-gacchati, (see Fausbøll's Jātaka, I. p. 135). This is a mode of expression which is substituted for pappoti vipulaṇi (or, paramaṇi) sukhaṇi. Viśeṣa means an extraordinary achievement which is Nibhāna.

Verse 21. Chaya dukhasa pramuni = Pālī khayaṃ dukkhasa pāpuni (Jīvutaka, pp. 30, 87), Sk. ksayaṃ duḥkhasya prāpūṇi. Chaya dukhasa, 'the destruction of suffering,' is a negative expression for parama sukha.

Notes.—Here is just another instance of a new verse constructed out of some stereotyped Pālī materials with a different setting. The materials are :—

(1) appamāṇaralā hota (Dhp. v. 327)—for the first foot of the Prakrit. Cf. v. 17 above.

(2) khayo ve mā upaccagā | Khaṇatitā hi soṇati niraṇṇamhi samappitū || (Dhp. v. 315 ; Therag. v. 403) —for the rest of the verse.

This expression constitutes the refrain of two distinct verses (cf. Suttanipāta v. 333 and Theragāthā, v. 1005).

For uvacai = Pāli upaccagā, we have nothing more to add to M. Senart's notes than that the process of the change of ga into i is through ja changed into ya, i.e., ga = ja = ya = i.

Duggā uddharath' attānaṃ pañke sanno³ va kuñjaro.

Cf. Udānav., ch. iv. ("Purity"), v. 26 :—

"The Bhixu who delights in purity and who looks with dread on impurity will pull himself from out the evil way as the elephant pulls himself from out of the mire."

es—The form and the spirit of the above verse are analogous to those of v. 22. In this case the new Pāli materials are :—

- (1) saddhamme supavedite,—for the second foot,—“in the good norm well explained,” “under the well propounded system,” which is the same in meaning as āhammupāde sudesite (see reference under Puṣav., v. 12); but compare Itivuttaka, p. 78, where we have the expression saddhamme supavedatha;
- (2) duggā uddharath' attānaṃ pañke sanno va kuñjaro,—for the second line,—“pull yourselves from out the evil away as an elephant pulls himself from out of the mire”; the simile forms a refrain of the Udānavarga verse, cited above, which is a later parallel of the Dhammapada verse 39.

For the forms drugha udhvaradha, we have nothing more to add to M. Senart's notes than that the aspiration of the sonant in drugha is due perhaps to the loss of āt in Sk. durgāt. The word seems to have reference to 'mud-forts'.

* Supplied by us.

* V t satio

is changed into m (cf. namu=Pāli nāvaṃ, Bhikhuṃ, v. 25). This would give us ameta or amiti for anveti. If we accept this reading we cannot but have to dispute M. Senart's amoti. Siha ba muyamatia would correspond to Pāli sihā (or sīhaṃ) va migamātukā. M. Senart imagines that the simile refers to a story where the lion killed himself by his negligence in fancying to have to deal with a gazelle instead of some formidable enemy. The Jātaka story is that the trouble of the lion was due to his going to be intimate with the she-deer in disregard of any danger. Muya=Sk. mṛga=Pāli, muga, maga, migu; and matia=Sk. mātṛkāya (abl.), Pāli mātukā(ya).

res.—This verse of which no exact counterpart can be traced in the Piṭakas also results from a combination of three set expressions transformed into Prakrit, so that the first foot nai pramadasamayū=Pāli nāyaṃ pamāḍasamayo, the second is the same as in verse 25, except for chayī in place of chaye; the second line=Pāli appamatto hi jhāyanto pappoti paramaṃ sukhaṃ (see Majjh. II. p. 105, Therag. v. 884; Dhṛp., v. 27). Reading through the Prakrit verses 20-27, one is apt to feel as though one original verse as represented by Dhṛp. 27 were expanded to enclose within its two lines many verses constructed out of set expressions, and this may account for the absence of their parallels in the existing Pāli canon. The exhortation of all these verses is in tone the same as that of verses 14 and 15, with this difference that while Nos. 14 and 15 purport to be commands, verses 20-27, no less than Nos. 16-19, bring out the reasons in support thereof. Pranoti=Pāli pappoti, Sk. prāpnoti. It is to be specially noted that the Prakrit form is an immediate change from Sanskrit.

The chapter contains 25 stanzas, hence ga 25.

Notes.—The difficulty as to the interpretation of the above verses arises chiefly from their incompleteness. One has to depend a good deal on conjecture in reconstructing the Prakrit verses from a few expressions or catchwords which now survive. The task would no doubt have been simple enough if it could be supposed that differences between the Prakrit and Pāli verses were mere phonetic. But these differences, real or imagined, cannot be shelved as such and are, therefore, not immaterial, since instances are not rare where the verses in the two texts agree on the whole, and yet there appear in them a few words, phrases or clauses, which greatly modify their sense. In the present case, however, no other assumption would avail us than that of complete identity or correspondence. Accordingly, the Citta-verses might be reconstructed and read as follows :—

Verse 1.—Duragama = Pāli and Sk. dūraṅgamaṁ, an instance of compound, meaning 'far-going', 'that which travels far'. The question whether the correct Prakrit reading would be duragama or durugama must be left open. The same holds true of the reading of the final syllable ma or mu. For mu cf. ratisabhamu in A<sup>1</sup>, 2. In support of the vowel a before g in duragama we might cite here a parallel instance, namely athagio (Magav. v. 30) which equates with Pāli atthangiḷo. In this latter Prakrit word the vowel a appears unchanged, in M. Senart's reading, before g. The Buddhist commentator's explanation of the word duraṅgama is :—"cittassa hi makkatasuttamattakampi puratthimādi-disūbhāgena gamanaṁ nāma n'atthi; dūre santampi pana āramāṇaṁ sampaticchatīti duraṅgamaṁ nāma jātaṁ." That is, "even during 'monkey-sleep'<sup>23</sup> (dreaming state), mind has no exit in the east and other directions<sup>24</sup>; even remaining at a distance, it entertains the object, hence arises the predicate far-going". <sup>24</sup> Cf. Brihad Āraṇyaka Up., IV. 3. 10, where Yājñavalkya says,— "Na tatra ratvā na rathayogā na panthāno bhavanti. Atha rathān rathayogān panthān syate"

Piataardana's theory of the unity of mental life<sup>1</sup>. But the predicate ekacara seems to have been based rather upon Yājñavalkya's expressions, all applied to soul, e.g., "asāṅgo na hi sajjate" (Bṛihad Ār. Up. IV. 2. 4), "ekaharṣah" (ibid, IV. 3. 11-12), "srapne ratri caritrū" (ibid, IV. 3. 15-16). Aśarīra=Pāli asarīram, a compound, meaning 'that which is without a body', 'incorporeal'. Mind has no bodily form nor has any such colour-distinction as yellow and the like<sup>2</sup>. Such is the commentator's interpretation. The predicate reminds us at once of Yājñavalkya's expressions "aśṛyo na hi śṛyate" (Bṛihad Ār. Up., IV. 2. 4)<sup>3</sup> Guhaśaya=Pāli guhāsayam, Sk guhāśayam, a compound, meaning 'that which lies in a cave', 'a cave-dweller'. The Dhammapada-Commentary says, "the cave is that which is built up of the four great elements. It is depending on the heart that the mind comes into play, hence its predicate 'a cave-dweller'".<sup>4</sup> The Buddhist predicate of citta reminds us at once of the Upanishadic notions of the soul, e.g. "nihito guhāyām" (Kaṭha, II. 20), 'that which dwells in the cavity of the heart'<sup>5</sup>; cf. Muṇḍaka, III. 1. 5. Cita=Pāli and Sk. cittam, mind.

It is clear from the foregoing discussion of the historical significance of the expressions dūragama and the rest, how close the resemblance is between the Buddhist conception of mind and the Upanishadic conception of soul:—(1) citta is dūragama in the sense that it can think of an object from a great distance; and soul remaining stationary can travel far ("āsāṅgo dūre vrajati", Kaṭha, II. 20); (2) citta is ekacara in the sense that all mental operations take place one at a time, as a unit with regard to time; and soul as a lonely bird roams about alone during dream ("ekaharṣah . . . srapne . . . caritrū . . . bhariatyasāṅgo", Bṛihad Ār., IV. 3. 12-16); and all the senses being unified perform their functions, the operations taking place one at a time ("ekabhāyanā vai prāṇī bhūtvā ekaikam sarvāṇyevaitāni prajñāpuyanti" Kauṣītaki, III. 2); (3) citta is asarīra

Kauṣītaki Up., III 2. "ekabhāyanā vai prāṇī bhūtvā ekaikam sarvāṇyevaitāni prajñāpuyanti".

'Cittasa sarīrasaṅghānaṁ vā nīlādippakāro vaṇṇabhedo vā n'atthitaṁ namā jūtaṁ'.

"Guhā nāma catumahābhūtaguhā idaṁ ca hadayaūpanā nissāya tīṭ guhāsayam vā jātum"

Cf. Bṛihad Ār U IV 3 7 V 6 C an ogya VIII 3 3 Taṭṭariya

Verse 4.—Anuvasutacitasa=Pāli anuvassutacittassa, an instance of compound, meaning ‘of one of undissipated thought’. We prefer anuvassutacittasa, as the reading anuvassuta cannot be defended on the same ground as anuvāṭhita, and it is not unlikely that the scribe wrote anuvassuta on false analogy with anuvāṭhita. Anavahatacetaso=Pāli anuvāḍḍhatacettaso, an instance of compound, meaning ‘of one with unperplexed mind’. For v standing for Pāli u, cf. uṭṭi equating with Pāli anvuti (I. c<sup>ro</sup>, 11-16). Punapava=Pāli puṇṇāpāva, Sk. puṇya-pāva, ‘(of one who is devoid of) merit and demerit’. This expression strikes the keynote of Indian religions of which the good lies beyond both merit and demerit, a transcendental state of mind which none but an Indian yogi can experience.

Verse 5.—Phanana=Pāli phandanaṃ, Sk. spandanam, ‘trembling, vibrating, or precipitating towards sensuous objects’, as the Dhammapada-Commentary puts it. Here the expression ‘trembling or vibrating’ is used rather figuratively, its primary sense being associated with the pulsation of life (cf. prāṇaṃ prāṇantaṃ, life pulsating, Kauṣītaki, III. 2), an idea, perhaps derived originally from the palpitation of heart. The idea phandana was deepened later into a more scientific Buddhist theory of apperception (pariṇaṃ). Capala=Pāli and Sk. capalaṃ, ‘unsteady’. Like phandana, the expression capala is to be taken in a figurative sense. The genesis of this idea of the unsteady nature of mind can be traced to electrical phenomena, such as the flash of lightning. Cf. the Mahōpaniṣad verses (IV. 99-100):

Na hi cañcalatāhīnaṃ manaḥ kvacana dṛśyate.
Cañcalatvaṃ manodharmo vahnirdharmo yathoṣṇatā
Iṣā hi cañcalāspandaśaktiḥcittatvasamsthita
Tām viddhi mānasīm śaktim jagadāḍḍambatmikām.

Druracha=Pāli dūrakkaṇaṃ, Sk. dūrakṣyaṃ (dur+rakṣyam), a compound, meaning ‘that which is difficult to guard’. Drunivarana=Pāli dunnivāraṇaṃ, Sk. durnivāraṇaṃ, a compound, meaning ‘that which is difficult to resist’. It affords another instance of the change of dur into du. Cf. dhammavakehi and notes, pp. 102-3; pravataṭṭho, p. 128, and dr g/a 1 13

Dhammapada these are put at the end of the Puppavagga; the Pāli counterparts of them can be traced in no other canonical text than the Dhammapada. They serve to throw into clear relief the contrast between the life of the multitude who are blind to the brighter side of human nature and steeped in the filth of worldliness, and that of a Buddhist saint who, though born among the common mortals, outshines them by their wisdom, like unto a lotus or lily, sweet-scented and lovely, growing among the heaps of refuse and filth beside a high road. - They seem to indicate the lofty aim of Buddhism, which opened the door of salvation, many centuries before the advent of Christianity and Vaiṣṇavism, to the persons of humble birth and of poor circumstances,—a feature which can be traced back to the Sāmaññaphala Sutta (Dīgha. I. p. 61).

Verse 14.—Sagaraudasa = Pāli saṅkārakūṭasmim, which is the same in meaning as saṅkāradhānasimim or saṅkārattānasimim (cf. saṅkāra-puñja, Therag., v. 578) = ‘on piles of filth and in dirty water’ (Udānavarga); ‘in a ditch in the field’ (Fa-kheu-pi-u). Ujhitasa = Pāli ujjhitasimim, Sk. ujjhite = chaddite, ‘thrown away’ (Dhammapada-Comy.). Here are two instances where the Genitive case-ending has stood for the Locative.

Verse 15.—Saghadhadhamae—this is substituted for the Pāli saṅkārabhūtesu (see the Dhammapada-Comy., which speaks of a disciple of Buddha as saṅkāra-bhūtesu pi puṭhujjaṇesu jāto, ‘born among average men who are no better than filthy heaps’). As to the Prakrit reading, M. Senart says that the form saghadhadhamau appears to him certain, though the last letter might be e or i. Nevertheless, “the word remains difficult”, he says, and suggests that the only way of avoiding the difficulty with regard to the first part of the word, would be “by admitting that the scribe has, through mistake, written saghadha for sagara = saṅkāra.” There is, no doubt, something wrong somewhere, but not probably where M. Senart locates it. Dhamaa or dhamae is not certainly = dharme, as he supposes. Some consonant like k appears to have been elided between the two final vowels. Saghadhadhamaa is perhaps = Pāli saṅkhataadhammakā or saṅkhataadhammāse (see Jātaka IV. p. 266) and saghadhadhamae = Pāli saṅkhataadhammake. In these two equations, an objection can be raised as to the possibility of the change of t to dh seeing that dh in the Prakrit text mostly is the

Verse 12. - Pradhavi = Pāli padhaviṃ, Ardhā Māgadhi padhaviṃ, Sk. padhaviṃ, 'the earth', loka, 'the world of men'. For the change of pr to pe, cf. accanti, Jarav., v. 23. We also meet with the form padhavi in Jarav., v. 17. Vijesiti = Pāli vijessati or ricessati, translated "superabit" (Faustholl) i.e., 'will overcome', 'can overcome' (Udānavarga); 'is able to select (conquer?)' (Fa-khen-pi-u). It is clear that the Udānavarga adopts a form similar to the Pāli vijessati, and the Fa-khen-pi-u another similar to the Pāli ricessati. The Dhammapada-Comy. explains vijessati in the same sense as ricessati: ricessati = vicinissati, vijānissati, paṭivijjissati, sacchikarissati, 'will fully know, cognise, apprehend, realise' = ricessati = vicinissati, vipaparikkhissati, 'will discriminate, investigate'. According to this interpretation, vijessati seems = Sk. vijñāsyati. The other interpretation accepted by the Tibetan translator of the Udānavarga and by the modern translators of the Dhammapada, viz., vijessati = "superabit", "will conquer", "will overcome" seems more acceptable. Yamaloka = Pāli Yamutokaṃ, "the realm of Death" = four nether worlds (catubbhikkam apāyutokaṃ, Dhammapada-Comy.). Eta = Pāli etaṃ. M. Senart says that this reading is more appropriate than the Pāli maṃ, and we have nothing to say against it. Sadevaka = Pāli sadevakaṃ, 'together with the world of the gods'. Dhamapada = Pāli dhammapadam, Sk. dharma-padam, translated by Faustholl "versus legis"; by Beal "the verses of the law"; by Rockhill "the law"; and by Max Müller "the path of virtue" = "the norm or the path of virtue categorised as the 37 constituent parts of enlightenment or beatitude (sattatiṃsa-bodhipakkhiṇa-dhamma-saṅkhātāṃ, Dhammapada-Comy.). That the term implies the idea of the path or the norm, virtue, purity, or any other synonym of Nirvāṇa is evident from the Suttanipāṭa, v. 88 (Candasutta, v. 6): yo dhammapade sadesite magge jīvaṇi (see also the Paramatthajotikā, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 164). There are again passages where the term in a plural form is applied to such moral topics as anabhijjhā, aryāpāda, etc. To discriminate the path of virtue according to this interpretation is to distinguish between a good and a bad doctrine, i.e., to understand the excellence of the Buddhist doctrine as contrasted with those of others. The other interpretation, that dhammapada = "Law-verses", seems more suitable for a text like the Dhammapada. To select or collect the beautifully expressed law verses like a skilful wrath maker is due to a most mechanical multiplication of the stanzas conveying the same sense. Having regard to the fact that the Number-verses cannot be traced in any other canonical text in the form in which they occur in the Dhammapada, a doubt is apt to arise if they were composed in the time of the Buddha. Even supposing that these were composed then, we have reason to believe that their number was far less than what it is in the several recensions of the Dhammapada. This hypothesis is borne out by the fact that we find one or two verses in the Manu Saṁhitā and the Jaina text which in their present forms are far later than the oldest portions of the Buddhist Nikāyas. Seeing that the Number-verses are mostly intended to contrast the Buddhist practices and principles with the Brāhmanic rituals, sacrifices, hymn-chanting and poetic composition, their origin cannot be dated farther back than the sophistic period immediately preceding the advent of Buddhism, during which several schools of Wanderers appear to have broken away from the ancient tradition and condemned the Brāhmanic system of learning and religious rites and dogmas with a vehemence perhaps unparalleled in the history of human culture. These revolutionary ideas gathering strength with the progress of time assumed at last a more rational, systematic and compromising shape in the teaching of Gotama Buddha, another revolutionary, perhaps the most powerful of all because of his synthetic genius. The Muṇḍaka and Gotamaka condemnation of the Brāhman priests with their elaborate system of sacrifice and mantras,<sup>1</sup> and the Keśakambala declaration of the unfounded character of the sacrifices<sup>2</sup> found a saner expression in the Buddha's utterances setting forth the sacrifices as less valued in comparison with the more dignified practices of religion. Thus we read in the Kūṭadanta-sutta (Dīgha I. pp. 143 f. ; Dial. B., II pp. 180-3): "The sacrifice performed with ghee, oil, butter, milk, honey and sugar only is better than that at which living creatures are slaughtered. Better than this mode of sacrifice is charity, especially that which is extended to holy and upright men. Better still is the putting up of monasteries. But better than this is certainly the observance of moral precepts. And the best of all sacrifices is the four-fold meditation".<sup>3</sup> One can justly point out this prose discourse as the historical basis of the Number-verses which, in their ultimate analysis, present but a universal idiom, e.g., one in a hundred, one in a thousand, or one in a million.

Cf. Dhammap., v. 103 + (Sahassavagga, v. 4):—

Yo sahasaṃ sahasena saṃgrāme mānuse jine
Ekañ ca jeyya-m-artāmaṃ sa va saṃgrāmajuttamo.

Cf. Mahāvastu, Sahasravarga, v. 3:—

Yo śatāni sahasrūpāṃ saṃgrāme mānujā jaye
Yo evaṃjñ jaye ātmāmaṃ sa vai saṃgrāmajit varāḥ

Cf. Udānav., ch. xviii. ("Self"), v. 3:—

"He who conquers a thousand times a thousand men in battle, a greater conqueror than he is he who conquers himself."

Notes.—As appears from Rockhill's translation, the reading of the Udānavarga verse is similar to the Pāli. The Prakrit verse differs from the Pāli by these two words—sahasani (= Pāli sahasāni), and jini (= Pāli jine). The difference could be minimised, if sahasani could have been interpreted, as M. Senart suggests, as an inversion for the Pāli sahasena. But this cannot very well be done as we find that the verse in the Mahāvastu contains the word śatāni which is the same in form as the Prakrit sahasani. A comparative study of these four recensions makes it clear that the Pāli form is the oldest, and that the Prakrit is older than the earlier Sanskrit. The teaching inculcated in the verse is that the greatest enemy of man is after all his own self and accordingly every effort must be made to conquer self. This lofty idea of self-conquest is in the Buddhist literature by a graphic poetic description of the inner struggle of the ascetic Siddhattha with Māra<sup>1</sup>, and no less by that of Buddha's disciples<sup>2</sup>. An earlier form of the conception of self-conquest, bereft of the later Buddhist imagery of a heroic fight with the lower nature of man is to be found in the teaching of the Muṇḍakas<sup>3</sup>, and a Jaina parallel of it is embodied in a dialogue of the Uttarādhyayana Sūtra<sup>4</sup>. The truth of the teaching of the Buddhist verse under notice was confirmed by two powerful Buddhist kings, king Asoka of India and king Duṭṭhagāmaṇi of Ceylon, both of whom came to feel remorse and intense agony of heart at the recollection of their experiences on battle-fields<sup>5</sup>. In the teaching of Asoka the idea of conquest by the dhamma took the place of the principle of self-conquest. "mu(kha)mute dhammarajage". The idea of self-conquest which shaped itself in the teaching of the Śramans proper, came to be recognised by the Buddhist teachers and kings as a distinct principle of action, and that in a form of conquest of hatred by love<sup>6</sup>, claimed in the Rājovāda Jātaka<sup>7</sup>, a marked advance on the 'tit for tat' principle. In this respect Buddhism can claim as much superiority to the juristic faith of the Brāhmins<sup>8</sup> as Christianity to the Mosaic doctrine of the Israelites.

Sahasani=Pāli sahasāni, Sk. sahasrāṇi. If this be not an inversion for the Pāli instrumental singular form sahasena, it must be interpreted as referring to manusa, like śatāni in the Mahāvastu verse. Ho=Pāli kho, an expletive denoting assertion. Sagamu utamu=Pāli saṅgāmajuttamo. M. Senart considers the Pāli reading as the result of a confusion of writing. But there is no confusion here at all. It is simply saṅgāmaji+uttama, a compound, which by the Pāli rule of sandhi has become saṅgāmajuttamo. Cf. saṅgrāmajit of the Mahāvastu.

Cf. Udanav., ch. XXIV. ("Numbers"), v. 2 :—

"It is better to speak one word of the law which brings one nigh unto peace, than to recite a hundred gāthās which are not of the law."

Notes.—These four verses (2-5) are very much alike, differing only, in the words of M. Senart, in some differentiation of detail. All of them teach that one Dhammapada gāthā, full of poetry and meaning, is far better and valuable than so many hundreds, thousands or millions (as the Jātaka puts it) of the Vedic hymns regarded as dealing with useless subjects, i.e., setting forth, in the language of the Dhammapada-Commentary, the descriptions of the sky, the mountains, the forest and the like, which do not throw light on the path to salvation (ākāśaraṇṇanā-pabbata-raṇṇanā-rana-raṇṇandālīni pākāsakehi aniggaṇadipakehi anatthakehi padehi saṅkhitāgā va bahukā haṇti). History, however, goes to prove that the Buddhists themselves, especially the Mahāyānists, were not immune from the same kind of adverse criticism not only from the modern critics<sup>1</sup>, but at the hands of their brethren, the advocates of the Sahajiyā doctrine<sup>2</sup>.

Verse 2.—Eka vāyapada would correspond to a Pāli ekam vācāpadam. Sebha = Pāli seyya, Sk. ś eṣas. The bh may be accounted for as due to the influence of the final s or h which is dropped in both Pāli and Prakrit. Similarly the s may be said to have been due to the desire to compensate for the lost sound s in śr.

es—It is a strange fact that the parallel of none of these verses (6-11) is to be found in the Dhammapāda or in any other canonical text. We must admit that the basic idea out of which they had grown, is embodied in a prose discourse, the Kūṭadanta-sutta of the Dīghanikāya. A comparison of the Prakrit verses with their parallels in the Fa-khien-pi-u and other recensions of the Dhammapāda makes it clear how easy it was for the Buddhists to multiply the number of this class of stanzas by merely changing a certain word or expression. It is also clear that the chief motive of these verses is to extol the principles of practical Buddhism, which are of far greater worth than the hundreds and thousands of sacrifices performed each month by the Brāhman householders. The Buddhist principles emphasized herein are just three, viz., (1) faith in the Three Jewels, (2) observance of the moral precepts, and (3) compassion for the living beings.

Verses 6-8.—Masamasi, masamase=Pāli and Sk. māse māse, 'each month'. In colloquial Bengali the idiom māse māse means quite the same thing, and māsāmāsi, which equates with the Prakrit form masamasi, means 'extending over a month'. In these verses there are numerous instances where i and e are interchanged. Sahasina śatena, sahasena śatina=Pāli sahasena satena, which is as idiomatic as sahasrāṇāṁ śatani śatani of the Mahāvastu verses. Yaea=Pāli yajjya, Sk. yajeta; y and j being inverted in yajeta of the Mahāvastu verses quoted above. Neva (written neri in v. 6)=Pāli or Sk. ndpa, as M. Senart points out. The reading na ri or na re would be the correct form; nera may be regarded as an inversion for na re. But ne ra taken as=Pāli n'era or Sk. narva would free us from the risk of such conjectures as nera=ndpa. Aveti=Pāli aveti or appoti=Sk. āpnōti, 'attains', i.e., 'deserves' ('agghat' or 'arghat'). We trust that it was not by mistake that the scribe wrote at ti for aghat.

Verses 9-11.—Saghasadhamesu = Pāli saṅkhatadhammesu, 'among those who have well understood the Norm'. Cf. the explanation given in the Dhammapada-Commentary, v. 70 :—"Saṅkhatadhammā vuccanti nātadhammā, tulitadhammā." The meaning of the word was changed when it came to be Sanskritised as saṅkhyāta-dharmānām, 'of those who have well explained the law'. For the reading see M. Senart's notes (pp. 59-60). Sabanaśīleṣu would be in Pāli sampannaśīleṣu, 'among those who have fully observed the rules of morality'. The adoption of the locative form for the genitive (cf. sampannaśīlānām of the Mahāvastu verse quoted above) is a peculiarity noticeable in the Prakrit verses 9-10. For the opposite process cf. paraṣa (Apramada-vaga, v. 1), p. 121; utthanaśālasu (ibid, v. 4), p. 123; apramadaśu (ibid, v. 17), p. 126; imāsu (ibid, v. 16), p. 132; saga anāśu (Puṣavaga, v. 14), p. 152. Ekapananuabisa would correspond to a Pāli ekupānānu-kampissa, Sk. ekopānānukampinah, 'of one who is compassionate towards a single living creature'.

the higher form of Buddhist worship are of far superior worth than the fire-worship and sacrifices of the Fānaprastha hermits. The Buddhist's is a simple moral under-estimation which must be carefully distinguished historically :

(1) from the Muṇḍaka's bold condemnation—

Nākasya pṛsthe te sukrte 'buddhītyenam lokam hinataraṁ and (2) from the Keśakambala's philosophical denial—

N'atthi yuttamaṁ, n'atthi hutamaṁ, n'atthi sukata-dukkatānaṁ kammānaṁ phalaṁ vipāka<sup>2</sup>.

But comparing the Muṇḍaka views and those of the Buddhists a little more closely, we must admit that these are in spirit the same, the latter having a milder form of expression than the former.

Verse 12.—Hinaviyava = Sk. hīnavīryarān (Mahāvastu verse), which is the same in meaning as the Pāli hīnavīriya. Sebha = śobha (v. 14), śīho (v. 17) = Pāli seyya, Sk. śreyah. These are instances where ś equates with Sk. śr. Arahato = Pāli ārahato, Sk. āraṁbhataḥ. These forms go to prove that i and e, and hh and h are interchangeable in the dialect of our Prakrit text.

Verse 13.—Udakavaya = Pāli udayaṁgayaṁ or udayabhayaṁ, Sk. udayaṁgayaṁ, 'growth and loss'. The change of y to k appears to be along the lines of the change of j to k ;
cf. babaka = Sk. pubbaja, Suhavaga, v. 8 (I. c<sup>o</sup>, 31, p. 80.)

Verses 15-16.—Chirena sapitelena divaratra atadrito = Pāli khīreṇa sappi-telena divārattam atandito. This line is to be found neither in the Pāli gāthā nor in the Uḍānavarga verse. The Mahāvastu verse substitutes for it: patraḥhāro chavāṇāsī karonto viridham tapam. Muhutaviva would correspond to a Pāli muhuttamiva : a vowel sandhi (muhata +iva). Sameva = Pāli sā yeva : a vowel sandhi (sā + eva).
The reading samera is a change from savera. The Mahāvastu reads sā eka.

Verse 17.—Yatha = Pāli yittam, Sk. istam. The root in the Prakrit word has not, like the Sk., undergone any transformation.

Ga 17 marks the end of the chapter and means, as before, that the chapter contains 17 stanzas.

[6. Panitavaga or Dhamathavaga]

This group, of which the name is suggested by the word dhamatha occurring in v. 1 or by panita in v. 3, infra, consists of ten stanzas, as may be ascertained from the colophon, "ga 10" (I. c<sup>ro</sup>, 34). Verse 3 of the Prakrit group has a parallel in one of the verses of the Paṇḍitavagga of the Pāli Dhammapada (ch. vi.), and some of the rest of the same group in other chapters of the Pāli.<sup>1</sup> The Dhammatthavagga of the Pāli Dhammapada (ch. xix.) contains 17 stanzas, of which none is to be found in the Prakrit group. The corresponding chapter in the Fa-kheu-pi-u (sec. xxvii.) also contains 17 stanzas which agree generally with the Pāli. Chapter xi. of the Udānavarga has 16 stanzas, of which four are similar to those in the Pāli group. The Pa ita or Dhamatha group is comparatively of little importance; it teaches whom we are to regard as virtuous and what should be his conduct.

<sup>3</sup> M. Senart dares not change it into kurati, though he thinks such a reading is very probable

Notes.—The expressions in the Prakrit verse are somewhat different from those in its Pāli and Sanskrit parallels. The verse embodies some fundamental principles of Dharma, enumerated differently in Indian literature. The principles referred to in it are—śīla (morality), śuṣī (purity), śaccha (truthfulness), sadhu-jīvana (innocent life) and atmano karana (dutifulness); cf. Asoka's Pillar Inscription, II apāvinare bahubhūṇā, dayā, dāna, śaccha, śachaye; also Rock Edict VIII: sarabhūṭānaṃ aśatāṃ, sayamaṃ, samacheraṃ, mādhavaṃ, etc.; Śāṅkhasamhitā, I 5 kṣamā, satya, dama, śauca; Jātaka verse (Faustöhl, II, p. 280): saccaṃ, dhamma, dhitti, cāga; Rāmāyaṇa, V. i. 193 (Bombay edition): dhṛti, dṛṣṭi, mati, dākeya; Chāndogya, III. 17. 1: tapa, dāna, ājñe, ahimsā and satyavacana, Mann enumerates ten principles: dhṛti, kṣamā, dama, asteya, śaucaṃ, indriya-nigraha, dhī, vidyā, satyaṃ, akrodha (v. 92). Similar principles are enumerated under ten numerical heads in the Saṅgīti Sutta (Dīgha, II), and throughout the Anguttara Nikāya. The Jaina texts also are not wanting in this kind of enumeration.

Silamatu would correspond to a Pāli śīlavaddo, almost the same in meaning as sīladassanasampanno of the Pali text. This is not an accusative singular form as M. Senart supposes it to be. Suyisacho = 'he who is pure and truthful', a compound with a peculiar grammatical construction. Instead of śuṣī (purity) the Pāli verse has dassana (insight). The Prakrit reading silamatu suyisacho etc., (as nominative singular) appears to be better than the Pāli accusative singular. Atmano karako would strictly equate with a Pāli attano kārako, 'he who does his own duty'. The expression is elliptical, some word being understood between atma and karako. Ta jano kurati priu = Pāli taṃ jano kurute piyaṃ, 'him people hold dear'. Rockhill's translation 'he.... delights the rest of mankind', or the Tibetan version itself, seems open to dispute.

es.—Sadhu=Pāli saddho, 'the faithful', the initial sibilant ṣ distinguishes this word from sadhu answering to sādhu. This is not the first instance in our Prakrit where ṣ equates with Sk. śr; cf. śacala (Sk. śāṛvakaḥ), Puṣav v. 15 (p. 152), sebha, ṣebhu, ṣehu, ṣho, ṣho (Sk. śiṣyaḥ), Sahasavaga (pp. 158-167); ṣutra (Sk. śrutrā) ibid., vv. 2, 3 fg (p. 158). Sabano=Pāli sampanno. For b=mp see anuabisa (Sahasav. v. 11). For bhoha=bhoga, see M. Senart's notes (p. 63). Vayati would straightway equate with Pāli vajati, Sk. vrajati 'walks', 'travels', 'passes'; cf. sabbattha ve sappurisā rajanti (Dhammap., v. 83). M. Senart says "Vayati might strictly be explained after the analogy of abhiraya (=Pāli abhibhūya), B. 30, 31 as=the Pāli bhajati. But it is more natural to think that it is=vrajati, and I should rather believe that bhajati of the Pāli, which it is very difficult to interpret, has sprung, by an inverse confusion, from an original vrajati". We, on our part, think that the expression yaṁ yaṁ padesaṁ bhajati (i.e., 'whatever regions he adopts or lives in') is quite different from yena yena rajati i.e., 'by or through whatever (land) he passes'. The former conveys the idea of settlement in a place, the latter that of the journey of a missionary. Indeed, the latter expression is quite natural to a Buddhist missionary from India, compiling a text of the Dhammapada, adapting the language of the original verses to the local dialect of the Gandharan region extending as far as Khotan.

Senart has suggested. Samu cari=Pāli somaṃ care, 'one should lead a life of spiritual calm'. M. Senart, suggests a reading samuccaret (Sk.), which would be meaningless in this context.

tes.—We have not as yet been able to trace to a certainty any Pāli or Sanskrit parallel to the above verse. The combination of the half-verses belonging to two different stanzas is an innovation in the Prakrit text.

Pratimukhasa is an instance of the genitive for the locative. See notes on sabanaśileṣu, p. 164. Pajasu=Pāli pañcasu, 'in regard to five'. The change of ñe to the sonant of the palatal group is characteristic of the dialect of the Prakrit text; cf. sagapa=saṅkappa, Apramadav., v. 4, v. 15, pp. 123, 131, sigara=saṅkhārā, Pusav. v. 14, p. 152; saghara=saṅkhārā, Magav., vv. 27, 28, p. 111; anuabisa=anukampinaḥ, Sahassav., v. 11, p. 162. Anupruvina = Pāli anupubbena, 'by degrees', 'gradually'.
 For pu = pur, cf. druga in v. 1 supra. This word indicates that Buddhism, like Brāhmanism, provided for a graduated system of religious training: adhisattasikkhā, adhicittasikkhā and adhipaśāsikkhā. The subject is discussed at length in the Gaṇaka-Moggallāna Sutta (Majjhima, III.,

—which is translated by the Bhikkhu Sīlācāra :—

" Upon the pure smiles constant May,
 The pure keep endless holy day,
 The pure, by actions pure confest,
 Their every offering is blest "

Notes.—The Pāli parallel to the above verse belongs to a group of stanzas in which the Buddha deprecates the washing of sin in the sacred waters, e.g., of the Bāluka, the Adhukakkā, the Gayā (or Phaggu), the Sundarikā, the Sarassati, the Payāga and the Bāhuvati, as well as the Brāhmanic method of sabbath-keeping. The verse teaches that a man is really purified by his pure actions and that by doing pure deeds he keeps the sabbath. Such a protest as this against the Brāhmanic faith is not peculiar to the Buddhist, as it can be traced, though in a less pronounced form, in the Muṇḍaka, the Katha and other Upanishads, which may be supposed to embody the views of the Muṇḍasāvakas, the Gotamakas and other Bhikkhu

Cf. Udānav., ch. xix. ("Day and Night"), v. 21 :—

The original Sanskrit of the Tibetan version, of which the above is an English rendering, is as follows (Yugavarga, ch. xxix) :—

Aham nāga iva saṃgr[āme].. [pa]titarā śaram
Ativākyam titikṣāmi duṣṭilo hi mahājanaḥ.

Cf. Manu, VI. 47 :—

Tudamāhi vāyāhi abhiddavaṃ nara
Sarehi saṃgāmagayaṃ va kuṇḍjaraṃ

Titikkhae napi aduṭṭhacetasā.

Notes—The Prakrit verse and its Pāli, Ardhamāgadhi and Sanskrit parallels, explaining one another, presuppose a common origin that leads us in the last resort to a popular Indian maxim. All these teach men to patiently bear up with the unkind words of the multitude, by the simile of an elephant in battle, pierced by the arrows, remaining yet patient. Cavadhi = Pāli cāpato, Sk. cāpataḥ. We have nothing more to add to M. Senart's comment on this word than that the form with the final vowel i is partly due to an attempt to maintain rhythm with the preceding word with the same ending, logam. Vatita = Pāli and

Sk. patitvān. The change of the p to r seems to have been effected through an intermediate change of p to b. Ativaka=Pāli and Sk. atīvākyañ=atīvādām (Manu). The form vaka presupposes an intermediate change of kya to kka through assimilation. Druṣilo=Pāli dussilo, Sk. duḥśīlah. The derivation is through a false analogy with forms like drugati, v. 4, supra.

(Cf. Udānav., ch. xi. ("The Śramana"), v. 10:—

"He who, breaking all his vows, (is held) as is a Śāla tree by a creeper, brings himself to that state to which his enemy would like to bring him".

Notes.—Druṣīlia=Pāli dussilyaṃ, Sk. duḥśīlyam, 'malignity', 'iniquity'. The form is an instance of false analogy, cf. druṣilo, v. 8. supra. Malua va vitata vani=Pāli māluvā va otata vane. The simile is less expressive or pointed than the Pāli māluvā sālam iv'otataṃ, but the Prakrit vani may be taken to stand for śaluvani. Here the imagery is that of a śāla forest overgrown by the intertwining and fast growing Māluvā creeper. M. Senart's reading malua vani lata vani gives the simple notion of the creeper rapidly growing in a forest, cf. tuphā vadḍhati māluvā viya (Dhammap., v. 334). Kuya=Pāli kareyya, Sk. kuryāt. Viṣamu=Pāli viṣamo, Sk. viṣamah, which may very well be used as a synonym of the Pāli diṣo, 'an enemy'.

ya ye bhujiya dussila raṭhapina asaṇato.

Ayokudo=Pāli ayoguḷo, 'a (red-hot) ball of iron'
We think the allusion is to a horrible form of punishment where the criminal was killed by a red-hot iron-ball thrust into his mouth. Bhujiya raṭhapina=Pāli bhuñjeyya ... raṭhapindaṇṇa, 'that (a wicked mendicant) should live the charity of the land'; cf. saddhā-deyyāni bhujanāni bhuñjitvā, Dīgha, I. pp. 5-12.

[7. Balavaga]

It is as difficult to suggest definitely a title for the present group as it was for the preceding one. But it appears that the group dilates chiefly upon the ways of the fool. It is, moreover, quite relevant that, after having dwelt upon the conduct of the wise in the foregoing chapter, some idea should be given of a fool and his manners. Whatever its appropriate name, the group as we have it in the extant Kharoṣṭhi Ms., is not complete; only 8 stanzas are preserved. The Bālavagga of the Pāli Dhammapada (ch. 5) consists of 16 stanzas, while the corresponding group in the Pa-kheu-king (sec. XIII.) contains 21. This group forms the 13th chapter of the Udānavarga and has 16 verses.

1 ida ja mi keca ida ji karia ida kari .....

Cf. Mahābhārata, XII. 175. 20 :—

Idam kṛtām idam kāryam idam anyat kṛtākṛtām
 Eyamihāsukhāsaktām kṛtānta kurute vaśe.

Notes.—No parallel of this verse have we been able to trace either in Pāli or in Sanskrit. M. Senart thinks that what remains of it would give in Sanskrit :—

Idaṁ ca me kṛtyam idaṁ ca kāryam idaṁ k .....
 vindamāno, bhimardati mṛtyu. . saśokam.

We have nothing to say against this sanskritization except that M. Senart has completely lost sight of the spirit of the Prakrit stanza. It teaches that death overpowers the fool who overestimates his own undertakings. This contention is borne out by the word vinamana, which, as we take it, is an accusative singular form = Pāli vināṇānāṃ. In determining the real purpose of the verse we have to fall upon other verses of the group, most of which are meant to bring out the thought and conduct of a fool. We might restore it, in the light of its Sanskrit parallel from the Mahābhārata, as follows :

<sup>1</sup> We have tentatively interpreted it as muca. But M. Senart's muca, followed by two doubtful letters, tempts us at the same time to a reading muca(ti) (na) sa śoa = Pāli muṭṭanti na sa sokā, for a similar construction cf. so duha na parimucati (I. cr<sup>o</sup>, 42). This would, however, leave abhimadati unconstrued.

* The circle is supplied by us.

ida ja mi kea ida ji kara ida kari mmi)
(suhu) vinamana abhimadati muen (balu) saśoa ○

If this restoration be correct, it is clear that the teaching of this verse is in spirit the same as that of—

Iti bālassu sūkaṇṇo, uehā māno eva vaḍḍhati ” and (2) Uḍānav., verse 1, ch. VIII. :—

“ Let both priests and laymen, whosoever they may be, imagine that it is I who have done it; in whatever is to be done or not done, let them be subject to me such is the mind of the fool, and his desires greatly increase ”

The reflections such as those embodied in the above verse, may be supposed to have been the outcome of moralising upon the tragic end of persons like Devadatta, who was so very anxious to make his influence strongly felt among others.

2 Ittha vaṣa kariṣamu Ittha h.matagi

(C<sup>o</sup>, 36)

(Cf. Dhammap., v. 256 f (Maggav., v. 14) :—

Idha vaṣaṇṇa sāmī idha bemaṇṭagimhān
Ita Ittha vicīṇet antarāyaṇa na bujjhat

(cf. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 38 :—

'This (abode) will do for winter and (this) for summer', thus ponders the rapidly decaying fool who has not seen the danger'.

Notes.—The Prakrit verse might be restored, in the light of the Pāli gāthā and its parallel in the Udānavarga, as

idha vaṣa kariṣamu idha heumatagissamsu<sup>1</sup>
iti balu viceteti ataraya na bñhati ○

We have reason to think that there is an allusion in this verse to the frivolous life of the rich who spent their time in the company of women, four months in the rainy abode, four months in the winter and four months in the summer—as described in the Vinaya Mahāvagga (Vin. I.
p. 15). The sentiments displayed in the verse are very natural to the recluses who were the avowed champions of morality and self-control.

Vaṣa kariṣamu—the same in meaning as the Pāli vassaṁ vasissāmi. The Prakrit expression is a later idiom, associated with the idea of the Buddhist Lent ("vattumāsaṁ vassaṁ vasissāmi"—Dhammapada-Comy.).

"Men concern themselves about the matters of wife and child; they perceive not the inevitable law of disease (and death), and the end of life which, quickly comes as a bursting torrent sweeping all before it, in a moment"

Cf. Mahābhārata, VII. 175, 18. —

Tam putrapaṣusampannam vyā-akṣamāmasam naram
Sutam vyāghro nrgam va mucu adaya gacchati.

suta ga(mu mahoho va mucu adaya gacchati ○)

In the foregoing two verses the term 'fool' is applied to the Bhikkhus and princes who are ambitious for lordship over others, and to the rich who lead a frivolous life, while in the present verse a case is made out against the householders in general who are unable to pursue the higher aspirations of human life on account of their excessive attachment to their wife, children and wealth. Cf. "Ukkhō gharavāso, abbhokāso pabbajjā", painful is household life, free is the life of renunciation. Thus a sharp distinction is drawn between the two modes of human life, and the contrast is beautifully brought out in the Dhanīya Sutta (Suttanipāta, No. 2). In the Prakrit verse, however, only the miserable life of the householder is dwelt upon, as also in the Dhammapada verse 62 :—

'Puttā m'atthi dhanam m'atthi' iti bālo vihaññati.

Samadha = Pāli *sammatta*m, 'maddened'. The change of tt into ṛḥ presupposes an intermediate change of tt to th. See Puṣāvaga, v. 15, notes on sagutha (p. 154)
Sutu gamu mahoho va = Pāli suttam gāmaṃ mahoghho va, 'like a great flood (sweeping away) a sleeping village'. The simile is perhaps the outcome of a knowledge of the torrential river-floods to which the people of the Punjab and Bengal are a victim.

Taṃ tādisaṃ paṭikatakkicakārīṃ, na taṃ kiccaṃ

Notes.—This verse, as also the next, condemns procrastination and urges immediate action—one of the salient features of early Buddhism. Puve i = Pāli pubbe hi, 'beforehand'; this meaning is otherwise expressed in Pāli by anāgataṃ paṭikayirūtha, explained in the Jāṭaka-Comy. as puretaraṃ karēyya. Parikamakicakari = Pāli paṭikatakkicakārī, 'one doing his duty beforehand' (paṭigacch'eva kattabbakicakārī, Jāṭaka-Comy.).

"He whose attentive mind delights in the truth and adheres to the (four) truths, he always walks in the way with his body, he is safe in speech and in mind, and, casting off sorrow, he will experience no more suffering".

Notes.—This verse with which the chapter, as it survives in the Kharoṣṭhī Ms., is broken off, emphasizes the necessity for constant meditation on the transitoriness of the body. Thus it introduces us to the teaching of the Jaravaga, but in the absence of a complete and unimpaired Ms. it cannot be said with certainty whether the Jaravaga formed a sequel to the present chapter. The Prakrit verse might be restored, in the light of its Pāli counterpart, as follows :—

yeṣa tu susamaradha nica kayakata sma<sup>(1)</sup> (akica te na sevati kici satacakarino) satana sabrayamana taṣa (gacchati parichaya ○)<sup>1</sup>

Taṣa = Pāli taṣinū (taṇhā), Sk. trṣā (trṣṇā), thirst, desire. The Prakrit form keeps closer to Sanskrit. M. Senart considers it to be a mistake for teṣa.

The colophon indicating the total number of verses contained in this chapter is missing, and we cannot say if there were more verses after this.

[8. Jaravaga]

A few chapters appear to be missing from the extant Kharoṣṭhī Ms. between the Bala and Jara groups. The Jara group, as may be judged from the colophon "ga 25" (l. c<sup>v</sup>, 23), contained 25 stanzas of which 2 are missing (vv. 1-2). The same group forms the 11th chapter of the Pāli Dhammapada and consists only of 11 verses, of which 4 are contained in our Jaravaga. The Prakrit group contains 2 verses which are to be found in chaps. III. (Ōṭṭa) and XIV. (Taṇhā) of the Pāli text. The remaining verses are collected from various canonical sources, such as the Saṃyutta Nikāya, the Sutta-nipāta, the Therā-Therīgāthā and the Jātaka. The first chapter of the Fa-kuei-king, which deals with 'Impermanence', contains 21 verses, of which two occur in the Prakrit Jaravaga and one in the Pāli chapter. Section XIV. of the Chinese recension bears the title Jarāvagga and contains 14 verses, of which one (v. 1) is to be found in both the Pāli and Prakrit chapters. The U'dānavarga has no separate chapter on 'Old Age', but treats of 'Impermanence'

<sup>1</sup> It will be noticed that the 6th foot of the Prakrit verse differs from that of the Pāli: the restoration has been suggested by means of the Dhammapada Comy. where n hata pa bhayam and 'Old Age' in its first chapter, which contains 41 verses. The Udānavarga and the Prakrit text have many verses in common. Of the Udāna verses 13 are to be found in the Pāli text, four in the Jarā group and the rest in other groups. Fausböll has in his excellent edition of the Dhammapada noticed a few ślokaś in the Manu-saṁhitā, the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa, containing ascetic reflections on 'Impermanence', similar to those in the Dhammapada vv. 148 and 150.

will be the cause of thy ruin".

Notes.—M. Senart was able to read only ra athu of the first line. In his text the sign "?" indicates that there are faint traces of characters, and the bold dots mean that so many letters are completely missing. None but those who have ever seriously attempted the identification of a verse, so hopelessly mutilated as the one under discussion, can realise how difficult a task it is to find out a parallel in Pāli or in Buddhist Sanskrit. It was indeed by accident that we after repeated searches chanced upon two verses in the Saṁyutta, corresponding to this verse and the next one. Supposing that the Prakrit verse is on the whole similar to the Pāli, it might be reconstructed as follows :—

4 yo vi varṣasāta jīvi so vi mucuparayano

Cf. Saṁyutta, V., p. 217 :—

yo pi vassasātaṁ jīve so pi maccuparāyano

Cf. Udānav., ch. i. ("Impermanency"), v. 31 :—

"One may live a hundred years, yet he is subject to the lord of death; one may reach old age, or else he is carried off by disease."

Notes.—The Prakrit verse might, perhaps, be reconstructed as follows :—

na kiji parivajeti<sup>7</sup> sarvam evābhimardati ○

Mucuparayano=Pāli maccuparāyaṇo, Sk. mytgu-parāyaṇah, 'subject to death'. In many instances Pāli words seem to obey the grammatical rules governing the changes of u into ṛi, while the Prakrit of our text, as appears

<sup>5</sup> M. Senart reads bhaje, which is evidently incorrect. We read ki for bh, consistently with the Pāli counterpart. The appearance of the character is much like the peculiar stroke of bh, which M. Senart has taken so much pains to establish in other instances, (see l. a<sup>o</sup>, I, note, pp 5-6). The stroke over the ja justifies the reading ji instead of je.

from M. Senart's readings, is characterised by the absence of the cerebral nasal. Kiji=Pāli kiñci, Sk. kiñcit. M. Senart reads bhaje, which gives no meaning. We have an alternative form of kiji in kici (Suhavaga, v. 13, infra) which stands closer to Pāli kiñci.

Cf. Pa-khen-pi-u, sec. XIX. ("Old Age"), p. 118.—

"When old, then its beauty fades away; in sickness, what paleness and leanness—the skin wrinkled, the flesh withered, death and life both conjoined".

Cf. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 35 :—

"The end of life is death, this body bent down by age, this receptacle of disease, is rapidly wasting away; this mass of corruption will soon be destroyed".

Notes.—The Prakrit verse, supposing that it is on the whole similar to the Pāli, as the portion which survives indicates, might be completed and read as follows :—

parijīnamida ruvu roaniḍa prabhaguno

—This verse cannot be traced in any other canonical texts, though reflections similar to those contained in it are met with throughout the texts of the Sutta Piṭaka.

Fausbøll has drawn his readers' attention to similar reflections in the Manu, VI. 77, the Rāmāyana, II. 105. V. 14, and the Mahābhārata, XI. xv. 18, 207 and XII. v. 829. One will look in vain through the older Dharmasūtras for such pessimistic reflections on the destructive side of nature. The Manu and Viṣṇu codes in their present form are recasts of a time when a Stoic mode of life was so firmly established among the ascetics and recluses as to find its way into the naïve positivism of the juristic thinkers. We need not be surprised to come across these reflections in the Hindu Epics, which mainly uphold and idealise the systems of the Smritis, because the epic kernels which survive in the shape of ballads in the canonical Jātaka Book and the Upākhyānas of the Mahābhārata bristle with them. As will be shown below, some of the important Jana-verses of the Prakrit text are to be found in the Dasaratha Jātaka, a Buddhist version of the older Rāma-story which, like the version in the Mahābhārata, was primarily intended to exhort people to keep up their spirits in the midst of trials and bereavements, considering that these are inevitable experiences of mankind.

Parijinamida=Pāli parijjāṇṇaṃ idaṃ, an instance of vowel-sandhi (parijim + ida), the intervening m having developed to prevent hiatus. Parijina or 'wasted' is virtually the same in meaning as jarā-śoka-samāriṣṭam ('permeated with decay and sorrow') of Manu VI. 77. It will be noticed that the Prakrit form stands close to the Pāli, but the latter fulfils the grammatical rules about the changes of n into ṇ, which the Prakrit does not. Roanida=Pāli roganīḍḍam, a compound, meaning 'the abode of diseases' (rogāṇaṃ nīresanattihānaṃ, Dhammapada-Comy; cf. Manu, VI. 77: rogāyatanam). It is clear from this that the Buddhist commentator is inclined to identify nīḍḍa with nīḍa or nīḍya, 'nest'. Roa is an alternative form of roku (see Suhavaga, v. 2, infra). Prabhaguna=Pāli pubbaṅguraṇaṃ or pubbaṅguram, Sk. prabhāṅguraṇaṃ, a compound, meaning 'that which is frail or fragile'; cf. āturaṇaṃ in Manu, VI. 77, and Dhammapada, v. 147. The final letter na instead of ra makes the word deviate from Sanskrit and keep closer to the Pāli. For bheṇṣiti, see M. Senart's notes (pp. 70-71). Putisaneho=Pāli pūtisaṇḍeho, a compound, meaning 'the body which is stinking' (pūṭiko samāno tadeva deho, Dhammapada-Comy; cf. arṇākāyaṃ, Dhammapada v. 147 pūṭikāyaṃ Comy rajaśālaṃ, Manu VI 77)

Maranata hi jivitu = Pāli maranantaṃ hi jīvitam, Sk. maranāntaṃ hi jīvitam (cf. Divyāvadāna, p. 100 ; Mahāvastu, III. p. 183 ; Rāmāyaṇa, II. 105, v. 14 ; Udānavarga, I. v. 22 ; Fa-kheu-king, I. p. 41 ; Vasubandhu's Gāthā-saṅgraha, v. 23). This corresponds to the expressions n'atthi dhuraṃ tūti (Dhammap., v. 147), antyaṃ (Manu, VI, 77), and jātā jātā marantīdha evaṃdhammā hi pāṇino (Therag., v. 553). Note how this idea of life ending with death is expanded in a verse incorporated in the Rāmāyaṇa, II. 105, st. 16 and the Divyāvadāna, p. 100 :—

Sarve kṣayāntā nicayāḥ patanāntās samucchrayāḥ
Sāhyoga-viprayogāntā maraṇāntaṃ ca jīvitam.

Life and death are one of the three pairs of constant and opposed phenomena whereby Makkhali Gosāla, the third great leader of the Ājīvikas, characterised the organic world, the two remaining pairs being those of gain and loss, and pleasure and pain (lābhaṃ, alābhaṃ, suhaṃ, dukhaṃ, jīreyaṃ, maraṇaṃ)<sup>1</sup>. The Buddha conceived of eight principles (attha loka-dhammā), divisible into four pairs. lābho, alābho, yaso, ayaso, nindā, pasāṇsā, sukhaṃ, dukkhaṃ, to which was afterwards added another pair viz., jīvitam, maraṇam, as can be seen from the Theragāthā, vv. 664-670. All these come under Pakudha Kaccāyana's two principles, sukhe, dukhe (Dīgha, I. p. 56).

Ko nu harṣo ko nu ānando evaṃ prajvalite sadā

( Cf. Udānav., ch. i. ("Impermanency"), v. 4 :—

"To one who is being burnt, what joy can there be, what subject of rejoicing? Ye who dwell in the midst of darkness, why seek ye not a light?"

—This verse cannot be traced in any canonical text other than the Dhammapada. The Prakrit text substitutes prachitī in the 2nd line for Pāli anaddhā. The reading of the Udānavarga seems to have been analogous to that of the Pāli text. The exhortation of this verse is no more than a poetical summary of the teaching of such Fire-sermons as (1) the Ādittapariyāya-sutta (Vinaya Mahāvagga, pp. 66-67) on the basis of which the Gokulikas, or better, the Kukkulikas are said to have formulated a doctrine of 'universal pessimism' (Kathāvatthu, I. 7, with Comy., and Preface to the "Points of Controversy"), and (2) the Aggikkhandhūpama-sutta which, according to the Ceylonese chronicles (see Mahāvamsa, XII. 34), Asoka's Indo-Bactrian missionary, Dhammarakkhita had made the principal text of his sermon to the people of Aparanta. The Prakrit verse seems to be older than the two verses in the Mahāvastu which appear to have been quoted from an older Sanskrit recension of the Dhammapada.

Prajalite sati = Pāli pajjalite sati, locative absolute, meaning 'while the world is burning (with passions and other painful mental qualities)'. The Mahāvastu reads prajalite sadā. Anakarena prachiti would strictly correspond to a Pāli andhakārena pakkhittē, an expression which is the same in meaning as andhakārena onaddhā. It seems that andhakāre pakkhittā is more grammatical than andhakārena; cf. rattikkhittā (Dhammap, v. 304) = andhakāre khittā (Comy.); andhakārasmim praksiptā (Mahāvastu).

Cf. Fa-kheu-pi-u, sec 1. ("Impermanency"), p. 40:—

"Every day and night takes from the little space given to each one born; there is the gradual decay of a few years and all is gone, as the waters of a pool are cut off (or exhausted)".

Cf. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 34:—

"Man is like a fish in a shallow pool of water; day and night this life is passing away; what subject of rejoicing is there in so brief a thing?"

Cf. Mahābhārata, XII., 175, 11, 12:—

Rātryām rātryām vyatitāyām āyur alpataram yadā
Tadaiva vandhyaṁ divasam iti vindyād vicakṣanaḥ
Gādhodake matsya iva sukhaṁ vindeta kas tadā Anavāpteṣu kāmeṣu mṛtyur abhyeta mānavam.

es.—Rativivasina = Pāli rattivivāsana, Sk. rātrivivāsana (if M. Senart's reading is correct). In order to equate with the Pāli ratgā vivasane, the Prakrit reading must be either rativivasani or rativivasane. Apataro = Pāli appataram, 'less', 'lessen'. M. Senart's reading aparato conveys no sense. Maṇsana = Pāli macchāṇaṁ, Sk. matsyāṇām, 'of fishes'. For ṣis = tsy, cf. bherisita (Sk. bhṛtsyate), Jaravaga, v. 5 (p. 189), and M. Senart's notes under C<sup>vo</sup>, 3 (pp. 70-71). Teṣa = Pāli tesaṁ, Sk. teṣām, and is closer to Sanskrit on account of the ṣ. The correlative of yaṣa is tasa, but here teṣa appears to refer to the fishes. The Pāli reading is tohiṁ, a locative form of tuhi, meaning 'there', 'in that'; cf. the Udānav. expression "there, in so brief a thing". Kumalaka or komalaka or komaraka = Pāli komārakaṁ, Sk. kauṁāryam = taruṇabhāro, (Jātaka-Comy.) 'youth', 'young age'. With regard to his reading nkumalana, M. Senart suggests that it might be equated with Sk. oka-annūlanaṁ, "the destruction of their abode". He also points out that if the form only were taken into account, one would think at once of a form nikā-annūlana, which, he says, is a form of speech, very little likely. Neither oka-annūlana nor nikā-annūlana can fit well with the meaning of the clause ki teṣa etc. Rockhill's translation of the Tibetan version of the Udānavarga, which is at best tentative, connects the idea of mirth with this clause—"What subject of rejoicing is there in so brief a thing ?" The idea of rejoicing can very well be associated with komāradatā. Supposing that the reading akumūlana is on the whole correct and that it has reference to fishes, it might be slightly altered into akumūjana and equated with a Pāli okā umunjjanaṃ, 'jumping out of water' (cf. Suppārakajātaka, No. 463, Fausböll, IV. p. 139; macehā . . . udake umunjjanimumjjun karonti).

<sup>1</sup>, <sup>2</sup> M. Senart reads ku dhayena, of which the first letter is written in such a way as to easily warrant a reading ru. In adjusting the reading of the first pāda we have the advantage of the Pāli parallels, which M. Senart could not discover.

<sup>3</sup> Frsg. C. xxiii<sup>vo</sup>, —not adjusted by M. Senart, who reads lapabha abanana. We have reason to change his pubha into puka from a comparison with kije which he read incorrectly as khaje (see v. 4 supra). For the last quarter-verse M. Senart has sa nica maranata bhaya ○ (see C<sup>vo</sup>, 7, p. 72), but a careful examination of the shape and position of the fragment makes it clear that it fits into the main plate only when it is pushed a little below and thrust into the next line, i.e., C<sup>vo</sup>, 8—an arrangement which is established beyond doubt by the fact that there is an exact Pāli counterpart to the Prakrit verse thus adjusted (q. v. under v. 10 infra p. 198). Accordingly, the aforesaid quarter-verse has been affixed to the fine-end of v. 11 and the gap thus caused is filled by Frsg. C. xxi<sup>vo</sup> with sufficient or our side.

Cf. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 10 :—

'Some are old, and some are young, some are grown up, by degrees they all do disappear, like ripe fruit falling' es.—Almost the whole of the second line of the above verse is missing from the extant Kharoṣṭhī Ms. A detached fragment, marked xxiii<sup>o</sup>, contains the line-end of a certain verse belonging to Plate C<sup>o</sup>. This fragment with the line-end—lapaḥ rabunana ○—needs adjustment, but we know of no verse of the plate under notice into which it may fit. M. Senart, too, has no suggestions to offer. Let us suppose for argument's sake that his reading is correct and see if any meaning can be made out of it. It admits of a two-fold construction : either (1) lapa bhavabanana = Pāli lapa bhava-bandhanam, 'cut off the ties of existence', or (2) la pubharabanana = Pāli—some word ending with lā or ṛā plus pubhava-bandhanā, 'the ties spring from'. But these interpretations afford us no clue to the adjustment of the fragment. Two assumptions are possible : either (1) that it contains the line-end of one of the first two Jara-verses which are missing, a verse similar, perhaps, in thought to the following stanza (Jātaka, VI. p. 27) :—

Kiṃ me puttehi dārehi, rāja mutto'smi bandhanā ;

or (2) that it contains the line-end of the verse under discussion, in which latter case M. Senart's reading must be slightly altered as (pha)lapaka ra banana or (ta)lapaka ra banana. The reading phalapaka ra banana (= Pāli phalapakkam ra bandhanā) is suggested by the final words of the Udānavarga verse : "like ripe fruit falling", and l lapaka ra banana by the final words of a verse in the Pāli Udāna (I l. 10) : tālapakkam ra bandhanā. This simile of a ripe fruit or palm falling from the bunch is quite in keeping with our verse. Accordingly, the Prakrit stanza might be completed and read as follows :—

ye vudha ye yu dahara ye ca majjhima poruṣa anu(patati sarva te ta)la paka va banana ○

—which will read in Pāli :—

Ye vuddhā ye ca daharā ye ca majjhimaporisā
Aṇu patati sarva te ta)la pakkam ra bandhanā

Yu is nothing but ya (= ca). It is obvious that ya has been influenced by ru of rudha as a result of the natural tendency to read two sets of three syllables alike, viz. ye ru dha and ye ya du.

- 10 (ya)<sup>1</sup>dha phalana pakana nica patanato [bhayo

Cf. Sallasutta (Suttanipāṭa, No. 34, Majjhima Nikāya), v. 576, Dasarathajātaka, No. 461 (Faustöhl, IV, p. 127), and Mūgapakkhajātaka, No. 536 (Faustöhl, VI, p. 28):—

Phalānam iva pakkānam niccaṃ patanato bhayaṃ
Evaṃ jātānaṃ maccānaṃ niccaṃ maranato bhayaṃ.

Cf. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 11:—

"As the ripe fruit is always filled with the dread of falling, so likewise he who has been born is filled with the fear of death".

Cf. Rāmāyaṇa, II. 105. v. 17:—

Yathā phalānāṃ pakkvānāṃ nānyatra patanād bhayaṃ
Evaṃ narasya jātasya nānyatra maranād bhayaṃ.

Notes.—The simile and main idea of this verse is tacitly implied in that of the foregoing one. Its intrinsic value and historical significance lies indeed in the fact that it stands in form midway between the verse in the Dasarathajātaka and that in the Rāmāyaṇa. As in the Sanskrit epic, the Prakrit verse begins with yadha = Pāli and Sk. yathā, while the simile is indicated in Pāli by the particle iva, put after phalānāṃ. In both the epic and the Prakrit <sup>3</sup> This line and is connected by M. Senart with the preceding verse. He reads instead—ya aya payeti panina O — as the line-end of this verse, but we have transferred it to the line-end of the next verse on the strength of a close-fitting Pāli parallel q v p. 199)

Notes.—Almost the whole of the first line of the above verse is missing from the extant Kharoṣṭhī Ms., and the remnant —ya aya payeti paṇina ○—has been misplaced by M. Senart, who tags it to the end of the preceding verse. As has been established, M. Senart's C<sup>vo</sup>, 8 is not, as he says, a patchwork of two half-verses, but of two separate, though fragmentary, verses which have been wrongly adjusted, not by the scribe but by himself. However, our adjustment of the fragments has gone a long way to enable us to complete the verse as follows :—

 emu jata ya muca ya aya payeti paṇina ○

—This stanza cannot be traced in any other canonical text than the Dhammapada. The simile calls up a vivid picture of a cowherd driving the cattle of a village to the common pasture, and strikingly brings home to an agricultural people like the Indo-Aryans the idea of the manner in which death drives all beings to their destiny.

Payeti = Pāli pāceti, an instance of causative.

 Yathā vārivaho pūro vahe rukkh'ūpakūhaje
 Evaṃ jarāya maraṇena vuyhante vata pāpiṇo

Cf. Fa-kheu-pi-u, sec 1. ("Impermanency"), p. 39 :—

"As the waters of a river ever hasten on and flow away, and once gone, never return, such is the life of man. That which is gone knows not any return".

<sup>2</sup> For the line-end here M. Senart has—tavi oharannaveva satu ○—which, however, fits better with v. 18. The Udānavarga has a verse (ch. i. v. 18) of which the final words correspond to oharannaveva satu :—"As the waters of a brook so flow on by day and night the hours of man's life t draws and n to its end"

Of. Udānav., ch. 1. ("Impermanency"), v. 15 :—

"As a river that is always running swiftly by and never returns are the days of man's life—they depart and come back no more"

Notes.—The whole of the second line of the above verse is missing from the extant Kharoṣṭhī Ms. in spite of M. Senart reading, as a line-end, tari oharanaseva satii ○—which fits better with the line-end of the following verse. The Prakrit verse might, however, be completed in one of the following two ways :—

<sup>1</sup> yadha nadi pravatīa racha vahati (upakulaja omu jaraya maraṇena vuhati vata panino ○)

Pravatīa = Pāli paravattitvā, Sk. pravartya, 'beginning to flow', a gerund. The form is closer to Sanskrit. Racha = Pāli rukkhāṇi, Sk. ryksaṇi (cf. racha, Asoka's Rock-Edict II, Manselira version). M. Senart says : "I am not sure of the reading racha or racha; anyhow I can only see in it a reflex of ryksa, whether for rracha or for rukha." For the form rracha, cf. rrachā in Asoka's Rock-Edict, II, Girnar version. If it is racha, cf. Pāli mālāvacchaṇi, Suttavibhaṅga, I. p. 179.

<sup>3</sup> He reads, and the Ms. clearly has, vo which, again, seems to have been influenced by the e of the preceding word bhoti. The final i is due to the influence of the preceding syllables. The words are run together in M. Senart's edition and read apakabhoti.

(C<sup>o</sup>, 11)

Cf. Mūgapakkhajāṭaka, No. 538 (Fausbøll, VI. p. 26):—

Yathā pi taṇṇe vitate yaṇṇi yaṇṇi dev'ūpaviyati
Appakaṇṇi hoti vetabbhaṃ evaṇṇi maccāna jīvitāṇi.

Notes.—The Pāli verse seems to have been expanded later into two Prakrit stanzas, which are bound up together in thought and serve to illustrate the course of human life by the imagery of weaving. The sense is: when the loom is spread out, no sooner are the threads spun out than what remains to be spun grows less and less; —a striking illustration of how the hours of man's life ceaselessly pass away. The imagery reminds us of the ancient myth where the Goddess of Fate is represented as a woman engaged in spinning the thread of man's life. The Prakrit verse 13 differs from the Pāli by its closing words oharanaseva satii (which would equate with Pāli oharayaṣṣ'eva santike). Dani vitati = Pāli vitale vitate, Sk. taṇṇe vitate, —(loc. absolute, 'the loom being spread out'). Oduopati, if the reading be correct, would strictly correspond to Sk. udrapati, used impersonally, meaning 'casts out or is cast out'. The reading, as M. Senart is also of opinion, is very doubtful. Oharana = Sk. avaharaya, better upaharaya, a synonym of marana in v. 14. Verse 11 expanding the idea of the Pāli clause evaṇṇi maccāna jīvitāṇi, would read in Pāli:—

Evam eva manussesu abhūdhāvanti pāṇayo

<sup>3</sup>, <sup>4</sup> We have changed M. Senart's a into dh, as these two letters have often been confounded in the Khareṣṭhi Ms.; cf. masura for madhura Pāli madhuraṇi l. B. 11 (pp 28-29); see also M. Senart's dhiti for sati (—Pāli smṛti), v. 16 infra. After M. Senart's a there is a gap, quite sufficient for one letter, which we have tentatively filled by a reading va. This gives us aviḍhāvanti, meaning 'they run the course of life' (quite in keeping with the simile of the thread being spun out).

<sup>5</sup> Filled by us on the strength of clear traces of the upper part of an s in the two-syllable. We have taken aviḍhāvanti as future 3rd pers sing of Sk. ā + √vi to enter house, ā + √vi to enter house.

<sup>6</sup> M. Senart entertains doubt as to the correctness of this reading here as well as in the previous words.

Sāyam eke na dissanti pāto diṭṭhā bahujjanā.
Pāto eke na dissanti sāyam diṭṭhā bahujjanā.

Cf. Udānav., ch. i. ("Impermanency"), v. 7 :—

"One sees many men in the forenoon, some of whom one will not see in the afternoon; one sees many men in the afternoon, some of whom one will not see in the (next) forenoon."

Sati stands for sai (= Pali and Sk. sāyam, cf. nai = adya, Apramaday., vv. 24-25). The t has intervened through False Analogy with diṣati. For the first o in bahojano, see porosa (v. 9, supra) = Pali porisā (also purisā). The Prakrit o can also be explained as having been lengthened from u to make up for the loss of a j in the Pali jj following.

(cf. Mūgapakkhajātaka, No. 538 (Fausböll, VI. p. 26) :—

<sup>3</sup> M. Senart reads diṭṭhi, which is clearly a mistake for sati (smti). In Khareṣṭhi the letters dh and s being very much alike have produced any n or s on t read ng and writ ng of nara for madhara (I B 11 pp 28-29)

Notes.—It is clear from the above citation that the lines of the Pāli verse are inverted in the Prakrit. The first line of the Prakrit verse has mara (= Pāli maccu, 'the mortal') for poso of the Pāli. Instead of Pāli narū ca atha nāriyo, the Prakrit verse reads nara nari ca khada, which appears to be an improvement on the Pāli reading without altering the sense. The Prakrit verse might be completed thus :—

tatra ko viśpaśi maccu daharositi jivit e dahara hi vi miyuti nara nari ca ekada ○

Viśpaśi=Pāli viśaṣe, Sk. viśraṣet, an optative, 'one should trust.' Siti=Pāli (a)mhīti, Pāli and Sk. (a)smīti, a vowel-sandhi (daharo + asmi + iti). The mistaken reading dhiti has led M. Senart to equate it with Sk. dhṛti (see footnotes under avidharati, v. 11 supra).

Mṛtaṃ śarīraṃ nstṛjya kāśṭhaloṣṭrasamaruṃ kṣitan

Notes.—The Prakrit verse or its Pāli counterpart which is one of the most important and exquisite in the whole collection, cannot be traced in any other canonical text than the Dhammapada. It appears to have expanded the idea of the first line of Manu, IV. 241, which also occurs in the Mahābhārata. It seems, moreover, to be a later poetical summary of the Vijaya Sutta (Suttanipāṭa, No. 11), vv. 8-9, and Sumedhā's psalms (Therīgāthā, vv. 468-469), containing ascetic reflections on the loathsomeness and transitoriness of the body. The interest of the Vijaya verses and Sumedhā's psalms lies in the fact that these show richer combination of the Dhammapada verse and the Manu śloka :—

Apaviddho susānasmin anapekhā honti nātayo.
Khādanti naṃ supāṇā ca sigālā ca vakā kimī,

(Vijaya Sutta)

(Therīgāthā)

—We are far from saying that the Buddhists were borrowers from the Mānavas or vice versa. The truth is that both the Buddhists and the Mānavas, no less than the poets of the Mahābhārata, had drawn upon a common source, which goes back at last to the people at large : we mean that the higher reflections contained in the verses under notice sprang originally from a cruder popular wisdom, crystallized in the shape of maxims which are preserved and used by the community in more forms than one. The language of these maxims in their popular forms is generally Prakrit, the term denoting no more than the current speech of a locality or community. Sumedhā's verses preserve a few remnants of Prakrit forms, e.g., chuttho for chuddho; kalikaraṃ, kaliṅkaraṃ for kaliṅgarāṃ; chaddūna, chathuna, chathana, chatthana for chaddita; viyakā, a Prakrit survival in Pāli. The reflections in the Vijaya Sutta and Sumedhā's verses are only a poetic version of the teaching of the kāyānupassanā or kāyagatasati section of the prose Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta (Majjhima, I) or Mahāsatipaṭṭhāna Suttanta (Digha, II); see also the Up., Prapāṭhaka I.

Chutthu may also be taken in the sense of chaddita, 'thrown off', considering that Sumedhā's expressions are almost the same as those in the Manu śloka : Chuttho kaliṅgaraṃ viya = utsṛjya kṣātrahatrasamaṃ. Cf. gali, chutā, chodā choḍā. Prof. Pischel notes a variant cuddho.

Var ante—kīk asī kī nkaraṃ

V —chathana chathana chatthana

The Prakrit verse might be completed thus:—

ayirena vatai kayu padhavi adhiṣe)ṣitī ruchu (apeta)viññana niraṭṭha va kaḍigaru ○

The Dhammapaḍa groups the Pāli counterpart of this verse under the Cīttavagga, but it has little bearing on the main theme of the chapter. The mere occurrence of the word viññāna or of the idea that a corpse lies senseless or devoid of consciousness, does not surely entitle it to a place in the Cīttavagga. The Prakrit text and the Udānavarga have rightly grouped it among the Jana verses.

Ayirena = Pāli and Sk. avirena, an adverb with instrumental termination, meaning 'without delay', 'very soon'. The Pāli form aviraṇ is a counterpart of Sk. avacāt which has an ablative termination. Vatai = Pāli vatāyaṇ, a vowel-sandhi (vata + ai); for ai = ayaṇ, cf. nai = nāyaṇ, (Apramadv., vv. 24, 25, pp. 138, 139). Padhavi = Pāli pathaviṇ, Ardhamāgadhī, puṭharīṇ, Sk. pythirgām. The form of the Prakrit text stands mid-way between the Pāli and the Ardha Māgadhī. Adhiṣeṣitī = Pāli adhiṣeṣati, 'will lie (on the earth)', can be compared with malā seti sraṇṇasāṇi, 'the deceased lies down in the cemetery', the expressions give an idea of exposure of dead bodies. We must understand by the word adhiṣeṣati or seti not that a man casts off his body, like the brute creation in general, to lie on the earth (which is rather an exception than a rule),<sup>2</sup> but that after his death his body is thrown away by his kinsmen or friends (ñātayo or bāṇḍhāva)<sup>3</sup> in a śmaṣṭāna where it undergoes the natural process of decomposition<sup>4</sup> or is eaten up by the worms and carnivorous birds and beasts<sup>5</sup>. Ruchu is according to M. Senart = Pāli rakkha (Sk. rakṣmaḥ), 'rough, rude', which may very well take the place of the Pāli chuddha, 'vile, despicable'. But we cannot fully agree with the French savant, for the Prakrit ruchu is a weaker expression than the Pāli chuddha which does not surely mean 'vile, despicable' as he supposes.

<sup>2</sup> In cases of deaths by accident, e.g., of persons dying by ship-wreck, in a desert or out of the way place. The Apuṇṇaka Jātaka (No 1) preserves the account of a perilous journey of caravans over a vast dry desert where hundreds of Indian merchants lay dead or killed, their bodies or remains being left undisposed of. Cf. a similar account of a fate of the pesanaka coṭṭā in the Vedābhūta Jātaka (No. 48).

His rendering of the Pāli word, no less than the commentators' paraphrase, is tentative and ultimately untenable. chuddho = apariddho, 'despised' (Dhammapada-Comy.), chuddha = chuddhita, 'forsaken', 'cast-off' (Jātaka-Comy. Fausböll, V. p. 303). The former interpretation is based upon a canonical text like the Vijaya Sutta, v. 8, —apariddho susānasmim—and the latter on Sumedhā's psalm (Therīgāthā, v. 469)—chaddhūna naṃ susāne. These canonical passages do not bear out these interpretations. In the Vijaya Sutta the meaning of chuddho is expressed by these three words; ulldhumāto, unīlako and apariddho,—'bloated, discoloured and despised'. Both the words chuddho and chaddhūna occur in Sumedhā's psalms (Therīgāthā, vv. 468-469), and the former word might have been taken in the sense of 'useless' (chuddho kalīṅgarāṃ viya = nirattāṃ ra kalīṅgarāṃ), if it had not referred to kāyo. We think that the Pāli chuddho is = the Sk. śubdhah, 'agnated'. This word indicates the successive stages of decomposition undergone by a dead body in a cemetery (cf. Vijaya Sutta, v. 8; Satipatthāna Sutta, Majjhima, I. p. 58). Such a condition was very useful to the development of the science of anatomy in India, as natural decomposition in 'charnel fields' served well the purpose of scientific dissection. Aveta-(or apeta-) viñāna = Pāli apetavīñāṇaṃ, lit. 'from which consciousness has departed', 'devoid of consciousness', 'senseless'. M. Senart observes that the Prakrit text appears to have replaced apeta by some synonym but does not suggest what it might be. Kullūkabhadda, the commentator of the Manu Saṃhitā connects the idea of acetana, 'senseless' with a log of wood (kāṣṭhaloṣṭravat acetanam). Kaḍigaru = Pāli kalīṅgarāṃ (variant, kaḷikarāṃ), 'a log or billet of wood' = kaṭṭhakhaṇḍa (Dhammapada-Comy.) = kāṣṭhaloṣṭra (Manu śloka). The Prakrit is, on the whole, more correct than kalīṅgarāṃ, and it stands closer to the Pāli variant kaḷikara, even if the forms kali, kaḷi and kaḍi may all be said to have been derived from the Sk. kāṣṭha: cf. Bengali kaḍi, kāṭhi, kāth. According to the Dhammapada-Comy., the comparison is with the useless parts of a tree left off in the wood, and this explanation is borne out by a Manu śloka (v. 69), the first line of which contains the expression arāṅge kāṣṭhalat tyaṅktvā, 'casting away like a piece of wood in the forest'. The word kaḍigaru or kalīṅgarāṃ may also mean a log of wood, lying useless in a forest, but it is not brought back home for consumption.

es —The two Prakrit verses appear to have grown out of one verse incorporated in the Pāli Dhammapada and the Udānavarga, and are, on the whole, similar to two verses quoted in the Divyāvadāna, probably from an older Sanskrit recension of the Dhammapada resembling that from which a whole chapter is quoted in the Mahāvastu, III. pp. 434 foll. The Prakrit verses stand, as the resemblance of certain words go to prove, nearer in point of date to the Pāli gāthā. Verse 18 might be restored as follows :—

It is somewhat difficult to say whether it is a charnel-field or a crematorium, of which the Pāli gāthā and the Prakrit verses depict the scene. The expressions saghavarṇaṇi śiṣaṇi (i.e., 'the skulls looking white like conch-shells') and kapotakāṇi athini (i.e., 'the pigeon-coloured bones') can as well be associated with a burning scene<sup>3</sup> as with the picture of a charnel-field. But scanning the verses closely, one can discover that these form an appropriate sequel to v. 17 and complete the description of the fate of a dead body thrown away in a charnel-field. Verse 17 does not proceed farther than the description of a dead body undergoing the process of decomposition and lying in the cemetery like a log of wood, and it leaves to verses 18 and 19 to describe what befalls the bodily remains after decomposition and consumption by the worms, birds and beasts, viz., the skeleton and the bones. As a matter of fact, these two verses, no less than verse 17, are based upon the Kāyānupassanā section of the Satipaṭṭhāna or Mahāsatiṭṭhāna Discourse, which actually contains the distinctive expressions, e.g., disā-vidisā vikkhittāni, atthikāni setāni (corresponding to kāpotakāṇi of the Pāli, and kapotakāṇi of the Prakrit verse) saṅkhaṇḍapūṇibhāni (Majjhima, I. p. 58). For such ascetic reflections in Indian literature, it is important to bear in mind the following references, which are interesting :—

1. Maitrāyaṇī Up. I. 3 = Vijaya Sutta, vv 2-7 = Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta, sees. 6-7.

With regard to the restoration of the first line we have followed the suggestion of M. Senart (q. v. p. 75). But instead of alapu one may read alavu. Also, ṛṇam. Ajṭakosakambala says, " āsandipaṇcamā purisā matam ādāya gacchanti, śiṣaṇā padāni paṭṭhāpentī, kāpotakāṇi atthini bhavanti, bhassantā- o" (Digha, I. p. 55). " Kāpotakāṇi kapotaka-vannāni, pārāpata- na-vannāni" (Samaṅgala Vilāsinī, I. p. 166). The story of Cūlakāla Mahākāla the Dhammapada-Commentary gives a detailed account of the changes of a dead body during cremation.

2. Prakrit verse 17=Dhammapada. v. 11=Vijaya Sutta, vv. 8-9=Therīgāthā. vv. 468-469=Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta, the first portion of sec. 8.
3. Prakrit verses 18-19=Divyāvadāna, p. 56=Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta, the latter portion of sec. 8.

Sec. 8 of the Satipaṭṭhāna Discourse, especially its latter portion, clearly indicates the importance of 'charnel-fields' in the history of the science of Anatomy in India, particularly in relation to Osteology (see Hoernle's Studies in Indian Medicine, Pt. I), long before the time when dissection became a desideratum.

Avathani=Pāli apatthāni (variant, avatthāni), Buddhist Sk. apasthānāni (Divyāvadāna)=chaḍḍitāni, 'thrown off' (Dhammapada-Comy.)="thrown away" (Udānavarga). It is difficult to understand how this meaning could be derived from avathani, unless we suppose that it is the neuter plural of avatha=Pāli apattham or avattham, 'dislocated', 'displaced'. When applied to alupuni ('pumpkins'), avatham=rippakiṇṇāni, 'scattered, at sixes and sevens' (Dhammapada-Comy.). Alapuni va sarade=Pāli alūpū'eva sārāde, Buddhist Sk. alābur iṣa kārāde, 'like pumpkins during autumn'; 'scattered like pumpkins, exposed to heat and wind during autumn' (Dhammapada-Comy.: sārada-kāle vāḍḍapahutāni tattha rippakiṇṇa-alūpūni riya). Diṣṭani would strictly correspond to Pāli diṭṭhāni, Sk. dṛṣṭāni, 'seen'. M. Senart says that the construction is "less normal, but not unacceptable in this form". This may be an idiom. But if tani diṣṭani ka rati be not regarded as an idiomatic construction and diṣṭani not taken as a past participle qualifying tani, we can explain the form as diṣṭana, a Gerund corresponding to diṣṭāna of the Pāli verse, the final i being accounted for as having developed out of rhythm with the preceding tani. The Buddhist Sanskrit form in the Divyāvadāna is also a Gerund, dṛṣṭvā. The Prakrit form keeps closer to the Pāli in having a suffix similar to the Pāli trāna. Prabhaguni, 'fragile'. We have a singular form of the word in v. 5, supra. The word in this plural form cannot be equated with Sk. prabhaṅgura. M. Senart rightly suggests that it implies a base prabhagu, identical in meaning with prabhaṅga. Diśodiśa=Pāli and Ardha Māgadhī, diso disam, 'in various directions', 'on all sides'. The Divyāvadāna verse reads diśo daśa 'the ten cardinal points'.

otes.—These three verses, which are quite peculiar to the Prakrit text, are bound up together in thought as completing the ascetic reflections in v. 5, supra. The Pāli parallel of the first line of v. 21, (and a posteriori of vv. 20, 22) is in the Saṃyutta verse cited above, and that of the third line of each of the three verses occurs in the Theragāthā, v. 32, and one need not be surprised if the parallel of the middle line, which is common to all the verses, be found out in some other Pāli verse, not yet discovered. The linking together of three lines, that is, of three separate ideas, into one verse, appears to be a novelty, serving to give altogether a new idea, though the combination seems somewhat incongruous. At any rate, they betray quite a mechanical growth, however much a commentator may try to make out some grand meaning by his ingenuity. We are confident that the process of such co-ordination is earlier in the Buddhist literature, and that in all probability the number of verses was originally less than three, and perhaps not more than one. As may be conjectured from the Saṃyutta verse and that in the Udānavarga, the original verse consisted of two lines, and ended with the question "what is the use of it?" or "kā ratī" as in v. 19, supra, or with such reflections as we find in the second line of the Saṃyutta verse: aṭṭiyāmi hariyāmi kāmataṇhā samūhatā. However, taking the verses as they are, they seem to admit of a two-fold interpretation: either (1) that there is a break at the end of the second line, the construction lacking in some expression to complete the Stoic rime like that which might be translated "what do you gain (by)", or (2) that these verses mark a turning-point in the general trend of thought, in that they draw the hearer's attention away from the vain moralising on the transitoriness of the body to the real purpose to which the body should be employed. The second interpretation leads us to understand the underlying idea of these verses as follows.

Taking for granted that the body is such an such the question henceforth arises, what use we should make of it. Is it not proper to create for each of us an unsurpassed state of safety even with the help of such a body ?' This is quite in keeping with the spirit of Buddhism, which as a heroic faith sought to shake off the cowardly ponderings over the loathsomeness of decaying body.

Verse 20.—Putikaena = Pāli pūtīkāyena, 'with this body emitting impurity'; cf. putisaneho in v. 5, supra. Aturena = Pāli and Sk. āturena, which is identical in meaning with rounīḍu in v. 5, and āturaṇ in Dhammap., v. 147. Nicaśuhavijinena corresponds, according to M. Senart, to Sk. nityāśubha-vicīṛṇṇena, 'permeated with impurities'. The expression is not to be met with in Pāli. Jaradhamena savaso = Pāli jarādhammena saṃvāso, 'association with what is conditioned to decay'; cf. "continually afflicted by disease" (Udānavarga). Nimedha, if the dha be regarded as a clerical error for su, as is sometimes the case in the Ms. (see footnotes under avidhāvati. Jarav., v. 14, p. 202), would give place to a form nimesa, which would tally well with the Pāli first-person form vimmissaṃ of the Theragāthā verse. If it be not such a mistake, then dha must be equated with the Pāli suffix tha, and nimedha classed with such second-person forms as arahadha, nikhamudha, bhodha, udhvaradha, etc (pp. 130-137). Parama śodhi = Pāli paramaṃ suddhiṃ, Sk. paramaṃ śuddhiṃ (or śaudhikam), 'the highest purity', which is the same in meaning as viśodhi (Magav., vv. 27-29), a synonym of Nirvāṇa. The Theragāthā reads santi, 'tranquillity', 'peace', another synonym of Nirvāṇa.

Verse 21.—Vidvarena is a curious Prakrit form, conveying the same sense as the Pāli bhindanena, 'by (that which is) brittle'; cf. bhedanadhamme kalevare, Therīgāthā, v. 380; parijina in v. 5, supra. Some of the Pāli Mss. of the Saṃyutta read bhindurena (instead of bhindanena), a variant which has a justification from cases like pabbhaṅgura—pabbhaṅguna. The Prakrit vidvarena sounds closer to bhindarena.

es.—This verse forms a fitting sequel to the foregoing one, as we reach in it a point where it is the turn of the compiler to say if there is anything within human experience which does not decay in the midst of decaying things. The reply given is in the affirmative, dilating upon the popular comparison of the body or material form to a chariot or royal chariot (cf. Kaṭha. I. 3, 3, quoted ante, p. 100, and Dh. v. 171 : imaṃ lokam rājarathūpamaṃ). The only thing that does not approach decay is sata dharma=Pāli sataṃ dhammaṃ, which is but a synonym of Nirvāṇa (Jātaka, V. p. 484). Sato hiva sabhā praverayati means the same thing as Pāli santo have sabbhā pavedayanti, 'the persons who have attained the tranquil state, discuss with the wise'. For santo, cf. Bengali sādhu-santa. Hiva of M. Senart is unintelligible unless it is taken, tentatively, as a mistake for hiva standing, with inverted vowels, in place of the Pāli have, that is to say, hiva from havi (by Metathesis)=Pāli have. For the second r of praverayati (=Pāli pavedaya ti), cf. Sk aṣṭādaśa=Pāli ṭṭharasa. This is the only instance of the equation of r with ḍ in the extant Kharoṣṭhī Ms is entitled to a place in the Tanhāvagga. But it is quite out of place in the chapter, entitled (in Rockhill's translation of the Udānavarga) "Day and Night", corresponding to the Yamakavagga of the Pāli text. It is out of place there because no verse in which the negative and positive phases of a single idea are not contrasted deserves a place among the "Twin-verses". The Prakrit verse might be restored, in the light of the Pāli gāthā and the English translation of the verse in the Udānavarga, as follows :—

sarvatra vi mutamanaso (na puna jatijaravuvehisi ○) <sup>parako</sup>

Muḥa would strictly correspond to Pāli muñca (pres. part.), 'having cast off' (Udānavarga). In the Pāli verse we have an imperative form of  $\sqrt{muc}$ . Puratu = Pāli purato, Sk. purataḥ, 'what is before' (purato, Udānavarga). In the Pāli verse we have the locative form pure. Pachatu = Pāli paccato, Sk. paścato, 'what is behind' (Udānavarga). Majhatu = Pāli majjhato, 'what is in the middle' (Udānavarga). The Pāli majjhe has a locative termination. The Pāli counterparts of puratu, pachatu and majhatu are explained in the Dhammapada-Comy. thus : Muñca pure'ti atītesu khandhesu ālayaṃ nikantaṃ ajjhesanvaṃ patthanam pariyoḡāhaṃ parāmāsaṃ taṇhaṃ. Muñca paccato'ti anāgatesu pi khandhesu ālayādāni muñca. Majjhe'ti paccuppannesu —(i.e., 'Free yourself from the thirst for, the dealing with, the diving into, the solicitation for, the seeking after, the dwelling upon, the past, the future and the present aggregates'). The exhortation of the above verse is expressed in another form in the Bhaddekaratta Discourse (Majjhima, Suttas 131-134) :

Atitaṃ nānvagameyya, nappatīkaṅkhe anāgataṃ,
Yad atitaṃ paḥīnaṃ taṃ, appattaṃ ca anāgataṃ,
Paccuppannaṃ ca yo dhammaṃ tattha tattha vipassati.

Thera Mahākaccāyana's interpretation of the Discourse (Majjhima, Sutta No. 133) which is the historical basis, as we take it, of the Sabbatthivāda doctrine, is this : Kathaṃ . atitaṃ nānvagameti ? Iti me cakkhvaṃ ahoṃ atitaṃ addhānaṃ iti rūpaṃ ti na tattha hoti chandarūga-patibaddhaṃ hoti viññānaṃ—(i.e., "How is it that a person does not pursue the past ? 'Such was my eye in the past, of this kind', to such a thought his mind is not attached with a passionate longing." So also with regard to the remaining senses, all collectively termed khandhā in the Dhammapada Comy.; and the same explanation holds true of the future and the present.

The chapter contains 25 stanzas.

[9. Suhavaga]

The following 20 stanzas expressive of the optimistic outlook of the Buddhist recluse life constitute a group, similar to and partly identical with the Sukhavagga of the Pāli text (ch. xv.), where the total number of verse is 12. Sec. xxiii. of the Pa-kheu-king, corresponding to the Pāli Sukhavagga, contains 14 verses, and the same group in the Udānavarga (ch. xxx.) contains altogether 53 verses. Although the colophon indicating the total number of verses in the Prakrit group is missing from the existing Kharesthi Ms., it may be judged from the general trend of thought that the group ended with the 20th stanza. The juxtaposition of the Jara and Suha groups is a remarkable feature of the Prakrit text, and it serves to bring out prominently, by a contrast of two modes of reflection on two aspects of human life, the bright prospect that lay before the religious life of the Buddhist Bhikkhus.

Cf. Udānav., ch. xxvi. (“Nirvāna”), vv. 6-7 :—

“Absence of disease is the best of possessions, contentedness the best of riches, a true friend the best of friends, nirvāna the greatest happiness.”

“All compound things (saṃskara) are the greatest of pains, hunger the worst of diseases; if one has found this out, he has found the highest nirvāna.”

ss.—These two verses form an excellent pair serving to throw by contrast the two aspects of human life into clear relief. After lingering so long upon decay and impermanence, it is, indeed, a great relief to read two verses which contain a message of hope. In the midst of decay and decrepitude there is a state of health, contentment and bliss which abides. The logical succession of thought is kept up better in the order in which the verses occur in Prakrit and Sanskrit.

Āroga parama labha=Pāli ārogya paramā lābhā, ‘health is a great gain’. Health is a medical term, used figuratively in the Buddhist phraseology to denote negatively a state of the absence of hunger or appetite. That health is a great blessing of life is a common-sense view, the natural desire of mankind, as, perhaps, of all forms of life being to live in valour, vigour and energy (śaurye, vīrye, balasi). The Buddhist teaching serves only to widen the idea of health, which is a state of well-being of the body as well as of the mind. A healthy mind is that which is free from sense-appetite. Santuṭṭhi parama dhana=Pāli santuṭṭhī paramaṃ dhanam, ‘contentment is a great possession’. Contentment is a positive nomenclature for aroga, as wealth is that for gain.

—Two words are important : matra = Pāli mattā, Sk. mātrā, 'a smaller measure', and vivula = Pāli and Sk. vipulaṃ, 'a larger measure'. paricai = Pāli pariccāgā. Cf. uracai (I. B. 3, p. 25) = Pāli apaccagā. The verse teaches that when a man has a choice between two measures of happiness, he ought to strive for the larger one. The principle inculcated is not Utilitarian, i.e., the greatest happiness of the greatest number. The happiness aimed at is an individual experience. In the Devadaha Sutta (Majjhima, No. 101) Buddha refutes the Jaina theory of the quantification of pleasure and pain. In his opinion one cannot say this quantity of pain (ettakaṃ dukkhaṃ) is due to self, and that to not-self. Here the idea of quantity implies no more than intensity of feeling.

es—These four verses (4-7), all characterised by a highly optimistic tone, constitute a sub-group and clearly depict the bright prospect that lay before the Indian religion of renunciation, especially in its Buddhist form. There is a general agreement in the reading of other recensions, while the Prakrit verses differ by substituting certain expressions which modify the sense. But it goes without saying that the Prakrit stanzas have considerably deteriorated the lofty tone of their Pāli and Sanskrit parallels.

From a comparative study of this sub-group in its several recensions we are led to think that the Dhammapada verses betray a process of later manipulation on a common model, and that this model is no other than the verse which occurs in a story common to the Mahābhārata and the Mahājanaka Jātaka (Fausböll, No. 539), designated on the railing of the Bharhut Stūpa as the story of "Janako rājā Sivali devī". Indeed, both the Mahābhārata and the Jātaka Book go to prove that the teaching of the verses under notice was formulated for the first time in history by a king of Videha, of which Mithilā was the capital. All the stories that are preserved, in Indian literature, of Videhan kings, such as those of Makhādeva, Nimi and the Janakas, bring home one fact, namely, that the personal examples of these princes gave a great impetus to the ideal of renunciation. The Jātaka literature, which will ever be read as the largest collection of the older specimens of Indian ballads and folktales, is found to associate such examples with the kings of Mithilā and Benares. The city of Mithilā is set on fire, but it does not affect the mind of its ex-king, who lives exceedingly happy, having no earthly possession to claim as his own. The sentiments displayed are quite in accord with the national spirit of the Hindus in whose life, from the dawn of intellect, the spiritual motive predominates, throwing all material interests in the shade.<sup>1</sup> Now, so far as the Dhammapāda verses are concerned, they are intended to contrast the life of the householder, who is so unhappy with his riches and relations, with that of the Bhikkhu who is so very happy and contented, although possession he has none. These set forth the remote object of recluse life which is to impress on the householders that the true source of happiness is neither material prosperity nor earthly power but renunciation and contentment. They also imply a criticism of ascetic rigorism tending to the opposite extreme of civil life, and teach that the right method of stimulating religious fervour among people at large lies not in appearing more miserable in austerity than they do in their worldliness, but in bringing home to them the sharp contrast that exists between the two pursuits, one leading to material advantage and the other to Nirvāṇa (aññā hi lābhēpanisā, aññā nibbānapāminī, Dhammapāda, v. 75).

Verse 4.—Sukhā would be in Pāli sukkhāya, 'for the sake of happiness', a dative singular form of sukha. The Pāli reading anukkhāya, 'happily', seems better than the Prakrit which implies that happiness is the end of recluse life. The adverb anukkhāya signifies, on the other hand, that the religious life is lived for its own sake, while happiness follows as a matter of course. Usneṣu=anusua=Pāli ussukeṣu annussukā, Sk. utsukṣu anutsukāḥ, 'without anxiety among those who are anxious'. Rockhill translates the Tibetan rendering of utsukeṣu as "among men who are greedy," and Beal translates the Chinese rendering of anutsukāḥ by "sorrowless." Neither of these two renderings are up to the mark. The substantives utsuka and anutsuka imply greed as a remote idea, their primary sense being connected with the Sk. anutsukya or 'over-anxiety.' In Bengali the word utsuki is used in a good sense, to denote a person who is inquisitive, e.g., eager to learn something.

<sup>1</sup> Prof. Max Müller was fully justified in making this observation with regard to the Hindu civilisation. Not that the Hindus have all ceased to fulfil the secular functions of human life. Nor that they have not developed secular Sciences and Arts in their extravagant zeal for the pursuit of the higher aspirations of religion. But that there is no other people on earth who have made so gigantic an effort to prepare their mind to 'dwell apart like a star' from all earthly good. And whatever their political status, so long as they are true to this spirit of their forefathers, they have a distinct place in the history of the world and they have a distinct message to impart to other peoples.

Verse 5.—Viraneṣu averana = Pāli verineṣu averina. The Prakrit forms are difficult of explanation, but no less so is the Pāli verineṣu. M. Senart is of opinion that the Prakrit forms are derived from some words like vira or vera, phonetically = Sk. vaira, 'enmity.' These two words inculcate the Buddhist principle of stopping enmity by love.

Verses 6-7.—These are essentially, and even in expression, the same. The Pāli parallel to verse 7 contains a more striking moral, viz., of feeding on joy like the shining gods. Mu corresponds to Pāli uo, Sk. nuh. Says M. Senart, "the form mu, mo = nuh is known in the language of the Mahāvastu."

"Hell, indeed, has its gyves and fetters, but the wise man regards not these as captivity; the foolish man who is immersed in cares about wife and child and their personal adornment, he it is who is in real captivity."

"The wise man regards lust as the imprisonment of hell, as the hard bound fetter from which it is difficult to escape, and therefore he desires to separate this and cut it off for ever, that being free from any such cares (or, desires), he may find rest and peace."

(cf. Udānav., ch. II. ("Desire"), vv. 5-6 :—

"Look at those who are fondly attached to jewels, ear-rings, to their children (these are fetters); but iron, wood, and rope make not strong fetters, says the Blessed One."

"It is hard for one who is held by the fetters of desire to free himself of them, says the Blessed One. The steadfast, who care not for the happiness of desires, cast them off, and do soon depart (to Nirvāna)."

Notes.—This couple of verses seems rather out of place in the Suhavaga, as it serves to rob the optimistic reflections of their geniality. It has found its right place among the Tasa-verses in other recensions of the Dhammapada. However, looking the other way, it appears to form a logical sequel to the previous verses. In it we reach a point where we may expect to learn how to be free from attachment or what the fetters of attachment are. The reply is that a man can be free from attachment by getting rid of the pleasures of lust and walking out of the world after cutting the Gordian knot which is the affection for wives, children and wealth. There is no other way of escape than this.

Verse 8.—Aha dhira corresponds to Pāli āha dhīrā, an expression which would be grammatically incorrect. A reading āha dhīro or āha dhira would have been quite correct. But it is not uncommon in the Prakrits

Notes.—The Prakrit verse and its Pāli and Sanskrit parallels extol politeness and respect to the elders as the two cardinal social virtues, and inculcate that these serve to increase the life, fame, peace and influence of a man. They presuppose a common substratum which is no other than a popular maxim setting forth the general sense of Hindu society. The teaching thus inculcated is completely in accord with the Buddhist idea of discipline. Buddha promulgated respect to the elders as one of the seven conditions of national prosperity and communal well-being (Dīgha, II. pp. 71, 77). In his younger days he was unwilling to admit in theory any seniority by age, and as a matter of fact, he adhered to his theory throughout his life. The seniority of the Bhikkhus by age was determined by the number of tons kept by them.

bh. Vridhavayarino=Pāli vuddhāpacāyino, the same in meaning as the Manu vṛddhōpasevinaḥ, a vowel sandhi (vṛddha+arayarino). The change of e to y is very common in the Prakrit of our text. For the anomaly in the r, see M. Senart's notes, p. 81.

d(u)l(u)bb(o) p(o)r(u)ṣ(a)jañño na so sarvatra jāyati

—The verse is the utterance of an age when the Buddha was deified by his followers, and as such it cannot be dated earlier than the first century of Buddha's demise. The Mahāpadāna Sutta (Dīgha II No 2) embodies the earliest specimen of the Dhammatā doctrine, corresponding to the Brahmanical theory of incarnation. This doctrine enumerates the general conditions of the advent of great men such as the Buddha, and it is in the light of this doctrine, as developed in the subsequent Jātaka literature, notably the Nidānakathā, that the significance of the expressions in the verse can be understood.

Dulabho poruṣajaṇo = Pāli dulabho purisajāṇo, 'the man of noble breed is hard to find'. Poruṣajaṇo is an instance of sandhi (poruṣa + ajaṇa). Ajaṇo = Sk. ājanya, is used of a horse of the finest breed; here it is used figuratively in the sense of 'best', referring to 'man'. The commonest Sanskritic expressions however to denote similar idea, are forms like peruṣasūhṛ, peruṣargūḥra. As for the expression dulabho, 'hard to find,' some light on its significance is thrown by a passage in the Mahāvagga Sutta which expresses the following sentiment of the gods of the 'Thirty-three': 'Impossible it is that two supreme Buddhas should arise at the same time and in the same world system, far less to speak of three or four' (Digha, II. pp. 224-225, sees. 13, 14). Compare also Dhammap. v. 182 (Buddhav. v. 4):—

Kiccā mānussa paṭilābho
Kiccāñi mācāna jīvitaṇi.
Kiccāñi saddhammasavvaṇaṇi
Kiccā Buddhānam uppādo.

The general sense of the verse quoted above is quite clear. We have only to note that looking more closely into it one can at once see that there is really a comparison involved: it is hard to be born as man, while it is far more difficult to see the advent of a Buddha who stands far above the level of common men. Na sarvatra, 'not in every place and family', i.e., not in a country other than India, not in a province other than the Middle country and not in a family other than Kṣatriya and high class Brāhman (see Milindapañho, p. 225). Suḥu modati has for its Pāli counterpart sukham edhati, 'attains happiness.' According to M. Senart, the Prakrit reading is a lectio facilior introduced through the unconstraint of the scribe or his predecessor. If the construction suḥu modati be correct in Prakrit, suḥu (= Sk. sukharṇa) must be taken as an adverb and the phrase would be idiomatic and mean 'he' de g s uninterrupted es—Neither the Pāli nor the Sanskrit counterpart of this verse has been traced. M. Senart's rendering of the second line—'The association with learned men is a blessing; they have no stain'—is hardly in keeping with the construction of the last pāda. Kici teṣa na vijati is apparently a Prakrit expression corresponding to Pāli kicce teṣaṃ na vijjati or kūñci teṣaṃ na vijjati, in which latter case kici must be regarded as a mistake for kiji (= kīñci), for everywhere in the Prakrit text ñc has been represented by j. Thus the pāda must be rendered either, (The happiness of an association with the cultured) does not exist in their line of action (kici); or, The slightest amount of happiness arising from association with the cultured does not exist among them.—Of these two renderings we prefer the second, as it seems more in harmony with the sense of the first line, so far as it can be made out from a tentative adjustment. We say tentative because the illegible traces of letters in M. Senart's reading—????? ya narethina v.—have been read with the help of Frag. A. iv. ( uhaśino yo kama.e ), which according to M. Senart's arrangement of plates, ought to have been adjusted in a verse included in one of the plates A<sup>1</sup>, A<sup>2</sup>, A<sup>3</sup>, A<sup>4</sup> and B. As M. Senart says (p. 23), there are some fragments of A which find their proper places in B, e.g., Frags. A. v and A. vi. Such was the disorder in which these fragments came into his hands that we should not be surprised if what he calls frag. A. iv. really belonged to his C<sup>vo</sup>, 36, i.e., the verse under notice. M. Senart rightly takes narethina as equal to naritthinaṃ, 'of men and women,' although he has not been able to suggest any meaning of the first line taken as a whole. We admit that there is a great deal of uncertainty in our adjustment which can not, until the discovery of a

M. Senart has yokama.e. We read the first syllable as ye, tentatively. Frag. A. iv., completing Frag. C. ix<sup>vo</sup>. There is a blank represented by a dot, in M. Senart's edition, for the y of kamaye in Fr. A. iv. The ya reading narethina (Fr. C. ix<sup>vo</sup>) perhaps makes up the last syllable of kamaye, which we read without the stroke of e. Therefore, we do not read the ya at the end, but have thrust it into the previous word which is thus constructed

"To see the elect is happiness; to associate with the righteous is happiness; not to see fools is always happiness."

Notes.—This verse is appositely placed after v. 13 and its teaching is thrown into clear relief by the contrast implied between them. Moreover, this verse explains the expression śīlūtasavasa of the previous verse, and it praises association with the Āryas or the elect and condemns association with the fools. 'No friendship with a fool' (n'atthi bāle

<sup>1</sup> Savasa might, as in v. 15 fg., be taken as the Prakrit equivalent of the Pāli sammivāso, in which case the expression śīlūtasavasa would be in apposition with suhā preceding it the sense being 'happiness which is association with the cultured

The addition of the particle (a)vi (= Pāli api) is necessitated by the exigency of metre. The expression balana (= Pāli bālānaṃ, 'of fools') denotes, when interpreted in the light of v. 13, persons who desire the pleasures of household life. Nicameva = Pāli niccam eva, a vowel sandhi (nica + eva).

es —There is, in the verses, nothing to comment upon, as they express, though in a somewhat different form, the very idea of v. 16. The first line of v. 16 is connected in the Pāli text with the counterpart of v. 15, a procedure which is hardly justifiable. The Prakrit text and the Udānavarga have rightly linked it with v. 16.

Verse 15.—Śoyiṣu=Pāli sociṁsu, an aorist form which is used, as M. Senart points out, in the sense of the present tense. Note that the verb is plural, though the nominative is singular (cf. aha dhīra, v. 8 a ove). Savrasi=Pāli sabhaso, a form which is interpreted by M. Senart as due to Māgadhism. Nevertheless, he says that the reading might have been sarradhi, in which case it would be=Pāli sabbadhi.

Verse 16.—Dhorekaśīla=Pāli dhoraṃhasīlaṁ. K stands for y. Cadrinu occurs with a u which may tempt one to regard the word as an accusative form. But the sense is against such an interpretation. We do not venture to correct it to cadrina (for candri-ā), because the very form cadrinu occurs again in I. B. 7 (p. 27) as nom. sing. All that we can say is that cadrinu is perhaps due to a false analogy with surin, with which it goes hand in hand in common speech.

It is the result of an after-thought proceeding from moralising upon the demise of a great man and teacher such as the Buddha. It teaches that the body is destined to perish, and that happiness results from the complete cessation of organic existence.

Although the colophon is missing from the extant Ms., we are confident that this verse formed a fitting conclusion to this chapter.

ADDENDA

Containing certain additional parallels and notes.

The following Sanskrit parallels are quoted from the fragments of the manuscript of the Udānavarga in the collection of Pelliot and of Stein. The credit of noticing them belong partly to M. Sylvain Lévi and partly to M. de la Vallée Poussin. Here our references apply to Lévi's edition of the Apramādavarga (J.A., 1912, Vol. xx. p. 235 f.), and to Poussin's edition of some other chapters (J. R. A. S., 1912, p. 359 f.).

I. For the verses of the Apramādavarga, p. 119 ff. :—

Verse 1 = Lévi's Apramādav. v. 35 = Rockhill's Udānavarga, iv. v. 35 :

Verse 8 = Lévi's Apramālav. v. 10 :

Pramādam anuvartante bālā durmedhino jaṇāḥ
Apramādam tu medhāvī dhanam śreṣṭhiva rakṣate.

Verse 10 = Lévi's Apramālav. v. 4 :

Pramādam apramādena yadā nudati paṇḍitaḥ
Prajñāpramādam āruhya tvaṣokaḥ śokinm prajāṁ Parvataṣṭha iva bhūmiṣṭhān dhro bālān avekṣate.

Verse 11 = Lévi's Apramālav. v. 24 = Rockhill's Udānavarga, iv. v. 24 :

Apramādam praśaṁsanti pramādo garhitaḥ sadā Apramādena Maghavān devānām śreṣṭhātām gataḥ.

“He whose speech exalts earnestness and who always despises heedlessness will be greater among the gods than he who has made a hundred sacrifices.”

Verse 12=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 8=Rockhill's Udānavarga, iv. v. 8 :

Hīnān dharmān na seveta pramādena na saṁvaset
Mithyādrṣṭīm na roceta na bhavellokavardhanaḥ

“Have nothing to do with false doctrines, have nothing to do with the heedless ; he who delights not in false doctrines shall not continue (in) the world.”

Verse 14=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 37 :

Ārabhadhvaṁ niṣkramadhvaṁ yujyadhvaṁ buddhasāsane
Dhūnidhvaṁ mṛtyunaḥ sainayaṁ naḍāgāram iva kuṇḍjaraḥ.

Verse 15=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 36 :

Apramāḍaratā bhavata suṣīlā bhavata bhikṣavaḥ
Susamāhitasamkalpāḥ svacittam anurakṣata.

Add the following quotations just below the Pāli verse quoted on p. 135 :

Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 12 (Rockhill's Udānavarga, iv. v. 11) :

Pramāḍaṁ nānuyujyeta na kāmaratisaṁstavam
Apramattaḥ sadā dhyāyī prāpnute ... sukham.

Verse 23=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 27 :

Apramāḍo rato bhikṣuḥ pramāḍe bhayadarśakāḥ
Durgād uddharate' tmānaṁ paṅkasanna iva kuṇḍjaraḥ.

Verse 24=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 13 :

Nāyaṁ pramāḍakālaḥ syād aprāpte hy āsraṇakṣaye
Pramattaṁ Māra anveti sīṁhaḥ va mṛgamātrikā

Cf. Therag. v. 80, 2nd line :

Ābādho me samuppanno, kālo me na pamajjitum.

Cf. Therig. v. 95 :

Appakath jīvitath mayhath jarā byādhi ca maddati
Purāyaṃ bhijjati kāyo na me kālo pamajjitum.

II. For the verses of the Citavaga. p. 140 ff. :—

Verse 1=probably Rockhill's Uddānavarga, xxxi. v. 9 :

"He who, thinking not of the body, lives in a cave, and wanders about all alone, does conquer this flighty mind, and is delivered of the greatest of terrors."

Verse 2= Poussin's Documents, Cittav., v. 2 :

Vārija va sthale kṛipta okādoghāt samuddhṛta(h) Pariapandati vai citta-m) Māradhoyath prabhāvai.

One need not be surprised if the Prakrit expressions of the 2nd foot resembled those in Sanskrit and read somewhat like okuogha samuddhrata.

Verse 3= Poussin's Documents, Cittav., v. 28=Rockhill's Uddānavarga, xxxi. v. 28 :

A(nava)sth(itacitta)sya saddharmath avijānataḥ Pariplavaprasādasya prajñā na pariptyate.

"He whose mind is not steadfast cannot understand the holy law; he whose faith is fickle cannot acquire perfect wisdom."

Verse 5= Poussin's Documents, Cittav., v. 8 :

Spandanath capalaṃ cittath dīrakṣath durnivārapam
Byath karoti medhāvi iva tejanath.

Cf. The Jaina expression cañcala-cavala-cita (Leumann's Aupapātika Sūtra, s. 35, p. 46).
Note that the Sanskrit verse is an exact counterpart of the Prakrit.

III. For the verses of the Sahasavaga, p. 154 ff. :—

Verse 1 = Pelliot Ms., Sahasrav., v. 3 (J.A., 1910).

Verse 3 or 5 = „ „ „ „ „ v. 2 „

For the first half of each of vv. 6-11, cf. the first line of the Dhammap. v. 106 (Sahasrav., v. 7) :

Māse māse sahasseṇa yo yajetha sataṃ samaṃ

IV. For the verses of the Panitavaga, p. 169 ff. :—

Add the following notes on p. 172, just in the middle of the 6th line : cf. pramajea, Pāli pamajjeyya (p. 119). The Pāli counterpart samayarea (sing.) should be samācarati acc. to a Jātaka verse quoted below. For such optative forms standing for Present, as also for Past, cf. adea = Pāli vyadheti, vyadhesi (Balav. v. 4, p. 188). For instances where the final a corresponds to the Pāli suffix tha (3rd pers.) cf. jaea (Pāli jāyetha), Puṣav, v. 14, p. 152 ; yaea Pāli yajetha, Sahasav. v. 6-11.

[Narakam pāpakar]maṇa(h) kṛtapunyaṣṭu svargatim

For verse 5, cf. Therag. v. 865 :

Silakkhandhe patiṭṭhāya satim paññaṃ ca bhāvayaṃ
Pāpunim anupubbena sabbasaṃyojanakkhayaṃ.

Note on p. 176 that acc. to Franke cavadhī = cāpūt adhi

V. For the verses of the Balavarga, p. 179 ff. :—

Verse 1 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 41 = Rockhill's Udānavarga, I. v. 40 :

Idam (me kārya)ṁ kartavyam idam kṛtvā bhaviṣyati,
Ity evaṁ spṛanto martya jarā mṛtyuś ca mardati.

"Such and such actions are a source of felicity, which I, having performed them, will acquire. He who prepares himself in this manner, will overcome age, disease, and death."

The Sanskrit parallel and its translation quoted above fully bears out the general sense of the Prakrit verse as suggested by M. Senart : " by properly understanding one's duty, one crushes death and the pains of it." The meaning and the restoration suggested by us on p. 180 are rather based upon a verse of the Mahābhārata, quoted on p. 170. Although we are unable to understand the propriety of the inclusion of the verse under the Balavarga, if its sense be what is brought out by its parallel in the Udānavarga, we feel constrained to accept the explanation of M. Senart and restore the verse as follows :

Verse 2 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 38.

Iha varṣaṁ kariṣyāmi hemantaṁ grīṣmaṁ oṣa ca
Bālo vicinta (yat)(ti) hy antarāyāṁ na paśyati.

Note that the first foot of the Prakrit verse corresponds to that of the Sanskrit, while its second foot is in accord with the Pāli. The Prakrit word at the end of the verse might as well be paśati.

Verse 3 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 39 = Rockhill's Udānavarga, I. v. 39 :

Taṁ putrapaśusammataṁ vyākṛtamānasaṁ narāṁ Suptaṁ grāmāṁ mahauṅghaiva mṛtyu(rādāya) gacchati

"Thou who art surrounded by children and flock, children are no refuge. nor are father. mother, and kinsfolk. thou art without a refuge"

For verse 6, cf. Poussin's Documents, Yugav. vv. 41-42 (=Rockhill's Udānavarga, XXIX. vv. 45, 44 :

Akṛtaṁ kukṛtāc chreyaḥ paścāt tapati dṁskṛtaṁ
Śocate dṁskṛtaṁ kṛtvā śocate durgatiṁ gataḥ
Kṛtaṁ tu (sukṛ)taṁ śreyo yat kṛtvā nānṭapyaṭe Nandate sukṛtaṁ kṛtvā nandate sugatiṁ gata(h).

"It is better in both (this world and the other) if one has not done evil, for he who does it will suffer ; it is good for one to do what is right, for he will have no affliction."

"He who has done that which is wrong, suffers for it, and when hereafter he will be in the evil way he will suffer ; he who has done that which is right, is made happy, and when hereafter he will be in the happy way he will be happy."

Here is another instance where we find each of the two lines of a verse similar to the Prakrit or the Pāli has been expounded into one complete verse. The order of the two verses thus formed is inverted in the Udānavarga. This fact of inversion of verse-order and the discrepancy of verse-numbers suggest that the Turfan Ms. contains rather the text of an older compilation of the Udānavarga, i.e., the original of the text portion of the Chuh-yau-king.

Verse 8=Lévi's Apramāḍav. v. 20=Rockhill's Udānavarga, IV. vv. 19-20 :

Yeṣāṁ tu susamārbdhā nityaṁ kāyagatā smṛtiḥ Akṛtyaṁ te na kurvanti kṛtye sātatyakārṇavaḥ Smṛtānāṁ saṁprajānānāṁ astaṁ gacchanti āsṛavāḥ.

"He who comprehends the nature of the body, who reflects, and whose exertions are unceasing, does not what ought not to be done, and does what ought to be done."

"He, therefore, with memory and understanding will put an end to his misery. and when he has put an end to his misery (āsṛava) he will find the untroubled state

VI. For the verses of the Jaravaga, p. 186 ff. :—

Verse 3 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 29 :

Dhik tvān astu jare grāmye (varṇā pakāra)ṇ(i) jarle
Ta dhā manoramāṇā bhūtaṇ trayā yad abhimarditam.

Verse 4 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 30 :

Yo pi varṇasūtaṇ jīvet so pi mṛtyupurāvatāḥ
Ann hy evaṇ ja(trā jāt) i- i mo- i- vāntakāḥ.

Verse 5 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 31 :

(Par)ij(i) vṇam bhūṇ (rū) pūṇa vṇaṇḍatāṇ prabhaṇḍuram
Bhetayate pūṇasandehatāṇ maraṇḍantāṇ hi jīvitam.

Verse 8 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 33 :

Yeṣāṇ rātridivāpāye hy āyur alpotarāṇ bhavet Alpodake ca mṛtyānāṇ kāṇ (tatra ratnir) bhavet).

For verse 12 cf. Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 32 and Rockhill's Udanavarga, i. v. 33 :

Āyur divā ca rātrau ca caratas tigṭhataḥ tathā Nadināṇ (hi) yathā sroto (gaḥ) (cha)ti na nivartate.

"This life is fleeting away day and night ; it is unstable like the stream of a great river ; one goes on not to return again."

Verse 17 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 35 :

(Acirath) bata kāyo' yath pṛthi) v(hi) adhi)ś oṣṣyati
Sūnya vyapetavijñānaṇ nirastatāṇ vā karṇaṇḍuram.

Verse 20 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 37 :

Anena pūṭikāyena hy ātoreṇa prabhaṇḍupā
Nī ( ) ? parāṇ ātūṇ yogakṣemaṇ anuttaram

Cf. Therig. v. 140 :

lminā pūtikāyena āturena pabhaṅgunā

Verse 22 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 36 :

Kim anena śarīreṇa (visra)vāpūtinā (sa)d(ā) (Ni)tyaṁ (r)og(ā)bh(i)bhūtena jarā-maraṇabhīruṇā.

Note that nimedha (p. 213) equates better with the Pāli
nimmiddham

Verse 24 = Poussin's Documents, Anityav. v. 28 :

Oiryanti vai rājarathā (h) sucitrā hy ato śarīram api ja(rām upe)ti Sat(ā)n tu dharmo na ja(rā)m upeti santo hi taṁ satsu nivedayati.

VII. For the verses of the Suhavaga, p. 218 ff. :—

Verse 3 = Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. v. 30 :

(Mā)trā (su)kha parityāgād yaḥ paśyed vipulaṁ sukhaṁ Tyajen mātṛāsukhaṁ dhīraḥ sa(ṁ)paśyaṁ vipulaṁ sukhaṁ.

Verse 4 = Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. v. 43 :

Susukhaṁ bata jivāmo hy utsukeṣu tv anutsukā(h) (U)tsukeṣu manuṣyeṣu vi(ha)rāma hy anutsukā (h).

Verse 5 = Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. v. 47 :

Susukhaṁ bata jivāmo vairikeṣu tv avairikāḥ
Vairikeṣu manuṣyeṣu viharāmo hy avairikā(h).

Substitute yeṣāṁ no for yeṣāṁ no in the Sanskrit verses quoted on p. 222. Note that the Sanskrit verse quoted on p.
223 belongs to the Udānavarga (Sukhav. v. 44).

Cf. Mahābhārata, XII. 219. 50 :

Na khalu hi dahyate tra kṛśat

The ślokas corresponding to the Jātaka verses are not to be found in the existing texts of the Mahābhārata.

Verses 8-9 = Poussin's Documents, Kāmar. vv. 5-6 :

Na tad dṛḍham bandhanam āhur āryā yad āyasaṁ
 dāraṁ balbajam (Smaraktacittā manikūṭalaleṣu sp(u)treṣ(u) dāreṣ(u) ja

Verse 12 = Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. v. 29 :

Durlabhaḥ puruṣo jānyo nāsan sarvatra jāyate (Yatrāsan : jāyate viṣat tat kulam sukham odhate.

For the second half of verse 15 and the first half of verse 16, Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. v. 24 :

Duḥkha (bhāṣair hi saṁvāso) hy amitre(ṭeva sarvadā)
 Dhīraḥ tu sukhasaṁvāso jñāt(nām) iva samāgama(h).

For verses 13-14 cf. Leumann's Daśavikālīka Sūtra
 D.M.G.), viii v. 52 :

Vivittā ya bhava sejja, nārinam ya lave kham
 Gihī-saṁthavaṁ na kujja, kujja saṁhihi saṁthavaṁ.

Verse 17 = Poussin's Documents, Sukhav. vv. 11-12 :

Rathakāra iva carmatāḥ parikartann upānahaṁ
 Yad ya(jja)hāti kāmā(n)ā(nataḥ) tat sampadyate sukham
 Sarvaṁ cet sukham iccheta sarvakāmāṁ (pa-ri(tya)j)et Sarvakāmaparityāgi hy atyantam sukha(m)odhate.
